[1] = δώσετε, whereas G has ἔσται. But since the phrase ትሁቡ: ስመ: ዚአክሙ: ለርግ″ ለጻድ″ is clearly from Isa. lxv. 15 וְהַנַּחֲתֶם שִׁמְכֶם לִשְׁבוּעָה לִבְחִירַי, it is probable that E is right and G corrupt. Again δώσετε is naturally a rendering of תִּתְּנוּ. Is this a corruption of תַּנְּחוּ = καταλείψετε. [2] a–m. m reads መዋዕለ: ሕይወትክሙ: እመዋዕለ: t[2]β ስላመ: [3] LXX has here εἰς πλησμονήν = לִשְׂבָעָה. q reads ርግመት: but originally prefixed በ. [4] m reads ለዙሎሙ: [5] This supposes ὑμᾶς καταράσονται. [6] This should correspond to οἱ καταρώμενοι. [7] Corrupt: q reads ወዘለፉ: t omits next four words. [8] Corrupt for ወብክሙ: g u omit initial ወ. q reads መላእክሙ: e omits ወለ″ together with next word. [9] = ὁμοῦ μετά corrupt for ὀμοῦνται. Thus we should read ብክሙ: ይምሕሉ: = ἐν ὑμῖν ὀμοῦνται which is here = בכם ישבעו = 'by you (the sinners) will invoke imprecations,' i. e. invoke on themselves, if faithless, the evils that have befallen you. Cf. Ps. cii. 9; Jer. xxix. 22; Isa. lxv. 16. [10] g m t u. q, n omit initial ወ. q, t[2], β add ለ. [11] q reads ብርሃነ: [12] n omits initial ወ and adds ለ. [13] q t u, β. g m read ይኩንክሙ: [14] t, β–o. a–t, o read ርግመት: [15] Em. m, a c d e h k l n read ወእመሂ: g q t u, b f o x y ,a ,b ወእመሂ: [16] q u read ጥበበ: [17] q t, β. g m read እሉንቱ: u omits. [18] a, e h l n o y. a b c d f k x ,a ,b read አበሳ: [19] q u prefix ወ. [20] q reads እለ: [21] g q. m t, β read ጥበብ: u omits. [22] a–q, c e l n. q, a b d f h o k y ,a ,b omit. [23] g m q, β–b x. t u, b x read አበሳ: [24] m q u, β–d. g t, d ወኢይትኬ″. ኢይትኬዙ: = οὐ κριθήσονται = לֹא יֵאָשְׁמוּ (cf. Ps. v. 10). But punctuated as לֹא יֵאָשְׁמוּ the words = οὐ μὴ ἁμάρτωσιν as in G. Or E=ישפטו corrupt for יפשעו=G. In any case the corruption was in the Hebrew.

[1] E = δώσετε. ἔσται corrupt. See note 1 above. [2] See note 3 above. [3] Observe Hebrew idiom. See note 1 above. [4] MS. reads αμαρτοι. [5] The first two clauses which I have bracketed are Christian interpolations. So also Radermacher. The remaining clauses are mainly doublets of ver. 7. E omits.

[6] E omits, but this clause may form the fourth line of the stanza. Radermacher brackets it. [7] Em. by Radermacher. MS. reads καταλυσιν καταραν. E omits clause. Probably a doublet of 7 (c). Radermacher brackets it. [8] Also in Wisd. iii. 9; iv. 15. [9] Doublet of 7 (a b). [10] Em. from αληθειαν with E ⲈⲘⲞ: In ver. 7 ἀσεβέσιν is rendered by the adjective from this root ⲈⲘⲞⲨⲦ: and in x. 20 ἀσεβείας is again rendered as here by ⲈⲘⲞ: Hence there is no justification for the various emendations of λήθην, ἄγνοιαν, &c. There is something to be said for ἀμάθειαν (Radermacher). [11] E = οἱ δὲ τὴν σοφίαν ἔχοντες πραεῖς ἔσονται. G is here like an Alexandrian addition.

aefhklnpx a corruption of ወስተ: In the next place the ደብረ: is supported by β but omitted by α. In this passage, as Hallévi (Journ. Asiat., 1867, pp. 356–7) has pointed out, there is a play on the name Jared if we retranslate into Hebrew יֵרְדוּ בְיֹמֵי יֶרֶד. We can hardly help assuming, therefore, that this part of the text is ultimately derived from a Hebrew source, though on other grounds we are obliged to postulate an Aramaic original of most of vi–xxxvi. x omits next three words. [1] g reads ወጸውዖ: (sic). [2] q omits. We should expect ደብር: [3] We have here again a paronomasia אחרימו . . . הֶרְמוֹן. This play originated probably first in Hebrew like that in n. 43, p. 13. [4] bcefhl[2]no and G[s]. α, adl(r)y ,a omit. [5] q omits. [6] q. g reads ሴሚ: አዛዚ: m, β–de ስምያዛ: tu ሴምአዛዝ: d ሲሚ". e ስሚአዛ: The word is from שְׁמְעוֹא or שְׁמְחוֹאי. [7] α–q. So G[s] οὗτος. qβ read ዘ. [8] gmu save that mu read as one word and g divides into two after ኪ, and the three MSS. omit the final ል. q reads አራክብራኤሚ: t, l አራኪበራሜኤል: save that l reads ማ for ሚ. a ኡራኪበርሜኤል: dkn "ራሚኤል: bcefhnox ,a ,b "ራሜኤል: l አራኪበራማኤል: Here ራሚኤል: probably corrupt for አራኪኤል: Thus we have in G[s] Ἀρακιήλ (cf. Ῥακιήλ no. 20 in G[s]); and again in G[s] in viii. 3 where it is speaking of Ἀρακιήλ we have ὁ δὲ τρίτος ἐδίδαξεν τὰ σημεῖα τῆς γῆς. Thus Ἀρακιήλ = ארקיאל where ארק = earth. This angel is mentioned as unfallen in Sib. Or. II. 215–17. Κιμβρά is corrupt. [9] gm. q reads ኮበባኤል: tu ኮከብ". β አኪቤኤል: save that l reads ኬ for ኪ. The name is from כוכביאל = 'star of God.' [11] t. g reads ራማኤል: m ራም". q, β ራሙ". This angel is referred to in Apoc. Baruch lv. 3, where see my note. [12] gmq, acdefhkln,a. t reads አዛቂኤል: bx አዝቂኤል: ("ቂኤል: x). o ኤዜቂ". u illegible. Since G[s] viii. 3 writes ὁ δὲ ὄγδοος ἐδίδαξεν ἀεροσκοπίαν this word comes from שְׁחַק. שְׁחַק is rendered by ἀήρ in 2 Ki. xxii. 12; Ps. xviii. 11 (Beer). [13] gm. q reads በራቂያል: t ባራቅኤል: aefhko,b ስራቂያል: bcdln,a "ቂያል: x "ቂኤል: The word = ברקיאל. [14] g, β–kl. m, kl read አስኤል: q አራስኤል: t አሳሒል: The word = עזאל (Schwab), but see other forms in Appendix. [15] gq, n. m reads አርመርስ: t አርሜርስ: u illegible. β–e አርምርስ: e አርሞርስ: Since G[s] viii. 3 writes with reference to this angel ὁ δὲ ἑνδέκατος Φαρμαρὸς ἐδίδαξεν . . . ἐπαοιδάς . . . καὶ ἐπαοιδῶν λυτήρια the name may be derived from חרם

[1] On these names see other Table in the Appendix. [2] The manuscript reading seems corrupt for ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν τῶν δεκάδων, a literal rendering of ראשיהן דעשרתא. We have an undoubted case of this in xix. 2 αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν τῶν . . . ἀγγέλων. Radermacher proposes ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν οἱ (ἐπὶ) δέκα, but this would mean 'their chiefs over ten (angels).' In G we should have οἱ δεκαδάρχαι αὐτῶν. [3] See note 5. [4] E = ἐξελέξατο ἕκαστος ἑαυτῷ μίαν. [5] E = καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ πάντες μετ' αὐτῶν καί, where the final καί is an intrusion. This angel (viii. 3) looked after the moon. [1] E = μίγνυσθαι. See note 2 on p. 16. [2] MS. reads εν. [3] E = ὥστε. [4] E = ἐτράπησαν, of which ἐτόλμησαν seems a corruption. [5] MS. μεγαλα. [6] Gˢ has στιλβειν which is corrupt. See note 8 below. The Aram. was prob. צרירא. Cf. 2 Kings ix. 30; Jer. iv. 30: Heb. פוך. [7] These clauses, though omitted by E and Gᵉ, go back to the original. That three classes of giants were mentioned in this chapter is presupposed by lxxxvi. 4; lxxxviii. 2. Moreover, Jubilees vii. 21–22 is based on this passage: 'The Watchers took unto themselves wives . . . and they begat sons the Nâphîdîm . . . and they devoured one another, and the Giants slew the Nâphîl and the Nâphîl slew the Eljô and the Eljô mankind.' In ver. 24 of the same chapter, Jubilees quotes the greater part of viii. 5 of E and Gᵉ. Hence, whereas Gˢ omits vii. 3–6 and E and Gᵉ omit portions of vii. 2 which Gˢ preserves, both texts are here defective. The three classes of giants go back to Gen. vi. 4. The Γίγαντες = נְפִלִים, the Ναφηλείμ = נְפִילִים, and the Ἐλιούδ the אֲנָשֵׁי הַשֵּׁם. ἐτέκνωσαν and τοῖς N″ ἐγεννήθησαν may be corrupt. We should expect according to Jub. vii. 22 ἔκτειναν and οἱ N″ ἔκτειναν. [8] Corrupt: στιβίζειν (Diels).

[3] E adds τῶν βασιλέων. G^{s1} has τῶν αἰώνων. See note 5 below. [4] Corrupt. E Gᵍ = τῶν βασιλέων or βασιλευόντων. If this corruption is not native to Gᵍ then we must assume a corruption in the Aramaic, the converse of that in note 5. [5] E = τῶν βασιλέων = מלכיא corrupt (?) for עלמיא. Hence 'Lord of the ages.' [6] G^{s2} has ἀνθρώπων, i. e. $\overline{ανπων}$,

[6] q omits. n reads ዘይክል: [7] g m t, f n o x $_{a}$ b. q u, a b c d e k l read ይትኀባእ: [8] a–t, n. t, β–n y read ርኢኩ: y ርኢኩ: [9] q reads አዛዛኤል: [10] n $_{a}$ = ὅς or ὅσα. All other MSS. read ዘከመ: = ὡς. [11] n trans. after ዓመፃ: [12] u omits. [13] n trans. before መሀረ: [14] q, t^{2} β. a–q read "አግሀዱ: x adds ዙሎ: [15] So g. First of all we see from G^{gs} that እሉ: ይትገበሩ: (g t, n. Other MSS. read እሉ: ይትገበራ:) should be trans. after በሰማያት: and that ይትገ" = ἐπιτηδεύουσιν or rather ought to. Hence we must read either ይገብሩ: or preferably ይትገበሩ: ምግባር: is a not unusual rendering of ἐπιτήδευμα. Cf. Lev. xviii. 3 (twice); Deut. xxviii. 20; Jer. iv. 18; vii. 3, &c. ἐπιτηδεύειν may mean 'to practise,' or rarely as in Herod. iv. 170; 3 Macc. ii. 14 'to attempt,' 'try.' I take this to be its most probable meaning here. Next comes ወ(a omits)አመረ: (= ἐγνώρισε) which is a corruption of q which reads አእመረ: = ἔγνω. Finally ሰብኤ: (q u: so G^{g}) alone is right. g m wrongly read ሰበአ: t ለሰብኤ: t^{2} β ሰብዕታ: Thus E = (τὰ) ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ἃ ἐπιτηδεύουσιν ἔγνω ἄνθρωποι, and we see that E faithfully reproduced the impossible text of G^{g}. For further critical restoration of the text see note 4, p. 23. E should be restored as follows (ዘ)በሰማያት: እሉ: ይትገበሩ: አእምሮ: ሰብኤ: or instead of አእምሮ: possibly ወይትኃጕሉ: (see note 4, p. 23). [16] I have supplied ወዘ. G^{g} supports ወ. In no case may the evils which precede be attributed to ስምያዛ: They are all due to the agency of አዛዝኤል: See x. 7, 8. [17] q reads አንተ: [18] g m t, β. q u read ወሀብክ: [19] m omits. [20] d y read in the singular. [21] q. g m t^{1} read በደቡ: ሰብኤ: (+በደቡ: ምድር: m originally) where ሰ" may be corrupt for የብስ: u, e (v) x omit. β–e read ጎቡረ: which t^{2} adds in marg. [22] = μετ' αὐτῶν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν = עמהין עם נשיא; for እልኩ: is only a rendering of the Greek article. Here E may be right, reproducing as it does the Aramaic idiom. G^{g} omits the difficult μετὰ τῶν θ., and G^{s} trans. it after καί and connects it with ἐμιάνθησαν. But G^{s} seems right: cf. x. 11; xii. 4; xv. 3; vii. 1. For ምስለ: which q omits, b l n read ለ, and for ምስለ: and next two words x reads ጎቡረ: [23] So also G^{g}. On text of G^{s} see note 22. For ወረዙሱ: d reads "ሰ: and y "ሳ: [24] t. g q read እሎንቱ: ዙሎ: m ሎቱ: ዙሎ: u omits. β reads ሎን: እሎንቱ: [25] a. β reads ኃጣውኦ: [26] a, c d y $_{a}$. a e h k l (v) b read ወአንስቲኒ: b n x ወአንስት: f o አንስትኒ: [27] g m t, a b c d e f h k o x a. q u, l n $_{b}$ read ረዐ". [28] g. m t read በዝ: q ወእምዝ: u, β ወበዝ: [29] q reads መልኡ: [30] t, β–b g m q u read ዙሎ: ምድር: b ምድር: ዙላ: [31] q reads ደም:

[1] E Gˢ = πάντων. [2] Gᵍ omits through hmt. καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ὃ κρυβῆναί σε δύναται. ὁρᾷς against E Gˢ. [3] See note 10, p. 22. [4] E presupposes (see note 15, p. 22) exactly this impossible text save that it reads ἔγνω or ἐγνώρισεν for ἔγνωσαν. If we insert καί before ἔγ. with Swete and Radermacher we arrive at a wholly unsatisfactory sense. Hence as Gˢ reads εἰδέναι it may be best here to read γνῶναι and regard the corruption as native to Gᵍ. Thus we arrive at an excellent sense 'which men were trying to know.' On the other hand a different meaning of ἐπιτηδεύειν 'to practise' is presupposed by Gˢ. See note 10. If we are bound to accept this meaning, then some corruption seems to lie behind ἔγνωσαν = ידעו (or יידעון) and εἰδέναι = מידע. These may be corruptions of an original וייבדון = καὶ ἀπόλλυνται. This gives a good sense: 'which men are practising and so are perishing,' i. e. by the practice of which men are being destroyed: and thus the text is brought into line with x. 7 ἵνα μὴ ἀπόλωνται πάντες οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐν τῷ μυστηρίῳ, κ.τ.λ., and x. 8 ἠρημώθη . . ἡ γῆ . . ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τῆς διδασκαλίας Ἀζαήλ. [5] Add ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις with E Gˢ. [6] Gˢ = καί. [7] See note 1 above. [8] See note 2 above. [9] E Gᵍ = καὶ ἐδήλωσεν τὰ μυστήρια τοῦ αἰῶνος. [10] Here Gˢ means 'they practise (Azazel's) practices in order to know the mysteries.' This is possible, but unlikely. [11] Corrupt. E Gᵍ = καὶ Σεμιαζᾶς. [12] Corrupt for ἄρχειν (Raderm.).

[1] MS. has αιας. E = τὰ εἰς αὐτούς—a corruption. [2] E omits wrongly. [3] E = ὁ μέγας καὶ ὁ ἅγιος. [4] These words should with Gˢ E be placed after Λέμεχ. E = καὶ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτόν. Gˢ λέγων. [5] See note 23, p. 24. [6] Emended by Raderm. from εστιν. [7] E adds πάλιν ὁ κύριος. [8] Gᵉ E = αἱ ψυχαί. [9] Emended by Raderm. from τῶν. [10] Gᵉ E = αὐτόν.

[1] E = ἐπίθες. [2] = E. G[g] πληγῆς. [3] MS. ιασονται. [4] E = τὴν γῆν. To explain the fact that in this and the next clause E has both times ምድር: = γῆ, G[s] has both times πληγή, and G[g] has first γῆ and then πληγή, we may assume that πληγή was the original in both cases, and that G[g] represents the first stage in the corruption and E the second. Or we may assume that the variations in G arose from two possible renderings of ארעא which punctuated as אַרְעָא = γῆ, and as אַרְעָא = πληγή. [5] MS. μην. [6] Here ἐπάταξαν = אַבְּרוּ corrupt for אמרו = εἶπον as we have in Gˢ; conversely in 2 Chron. xxii. 10 תְּרַבֵּר = εἶπεν is an error for תְּאַבֵּד = ἀπώλεσεν. Bouriant's conjecture ἐπέτασαν which I formerly followed is impossible. ἐπέτασαν cannot be used in this sense. [7] Gᵍ E omit. [8] E = τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ τῶν ἔργων. [9] κίβδηλος here seems to represent שַׂעֲטְנֵיזָא (cf. Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxii. 11) or some derivative of it as representing beings who are derived from two distinct classes of creatures. E took it as = ἀδόκιμος. [10] E = πόρνης, corrupt for πορνείας. [11] E adds τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς πόρνης καί. [12] E adds ἐξαπόστειλον αὐτοὺς καί—a dittographic rendering. [13] Add εἰς ἀλλήλους with Gˢ E. [14] Gᵍ E = ἄγγελοι. [15] See note 4 above. [16] Gᵍ αὐτῷ. [17] So also E. Gᵍ omits.

[1] MS. εργεσις. Em. by Lods. [2] = E. Read δέσμωσον as Radermacher suggests and change datives into accusatives. Perhaps G^g E go back to אמר corrupt for אסר = δῆσον. But Radermacher's conjecture seems right. The corruption of δέσμωσον (or δέσμευσον) into δήλωσον is native to G^g; for the original acc. μιγέντας still remains. [3] E = καὶ συγκλειθήσονται εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας—a free rendering of the text. [4] Em. with G^s from οταν: E = ὅταν. [5] = E. Corrupt for κατακριθῇ as in G^s. [6] Add with E καὶ ἔσται εὐλογία· τὰ ἔργα τῆς δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας lost through hmt.

[1] = שַׁבַּתָּהוֹן in which the word is wrongly vocalized for שִׁבְתָּהוֹן = 'their old age.' The error is explicable in Heb. also שַׁבָּתָם instead of שִׁבְתָּם (Wellhausen, Skizzen vi. pp. 241, 260). Hence read τὸ γῆρας αὐτῶν. [2] Appears to be intransitive here. E renders it transitively and puts the preceding nominatives in the accusative. [3] Corrupt. I cannot restore the text. 'Tree of joy' (as in E) is an expression not found elsewhere. πάντα τὰ δένδρα τῆς γῆς ἀγαλλιάσονται = כל־אילן ארעא יֶחְדֵי. The last two words may be corrupt for יאה בחֵיזוּ = 'goodly in appearance.' Thus we should have πάντα τὰ δένδρα ὡραῖα τῷ εἴδει. At any rate G and E are corrupt. Φυτευθήσεται may be an intrusion. [4] Text is translateable but seems corrupt. E = καὶ πᾶς ὁ σπόρος ὁ σπαρεὶς ἐν αὐτῇ ἕκαστον μέτρον ποιήσει χιλιάδας καὶ ἕκαστον μέτρον. The opening phrase is a nominativus pendens. [5] E = ἀδικίας. [6] E adds πάσης. [7] E adds ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς 21. καὶ ἔσονται πάντες οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων δίκαιοι. [8] E adds ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν. [9] E trans. [10] E = αἰώνων a wrong expansion of $\overline{\text{ανπων}}$ which appears in G.

[1] MS. αὐτῶν. [2] E corrupt = ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις. [3] Εὐλογεῖν used with dat. in Sir. l. 22; li. 12, &c. [4] Add with E τὸν γραμματέα καὶ εἶπον ἐμοί Ἐνώχ lost through hmt. [5] E = ἐποίησαν or πεποιήκεσαν. [6] MS. καιηφανισατε. Seems corrupt for ἀφ. μέγ. κατηφάνισαν. It is most unlikely that we should have here a piece of the oratio recta. E = καὶ ἀφ. μέγ. ἠφανίσθησαν but see note 23, p. 32. [7] E = αὐτοῖς which appears right. [8] A strange construction. [9] Corrupt for πορευθεὶς εἶπεν as is shown by E and G xiii. 3. The corruption in G may have originated in the Aram. G = אמר אויל corrupt for אזל ואמר. Here we may conclude either to a happy emendation of the Ethiopic translator of G or of the scribe of the Greek MS. used by E or to the existence in the Aramaic of both forms, the corrupt in the text and the true reading in the margin. [10] E adds ἐμέ. [11] MS. γενονται. [12] MS. αναγνοι. E = ἀνάγω corrupt for ἀναγνῶ.

[1] E = περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν περὶ ὧν κατεκρίθησαν. [2] E wrongly omits. [3] E gives the right order = δεξιῶν δύσεως Ἑρ. [4] Em. with E from ως. [5] E = ἵνα εἴπω. [6] E = καὶ ἐλέγξω. [7] Since E = Ἀβελσιαήλ it is not improbable that we have here a corruption of Ἀβειλήνη a town in the Antilibanus, which could be loosely described as lying between Lebanon and Senir, i.e. Hermon. There was a play of words in text. The angels were mourning (אבלין) in Abilene (אבילין). [8] The O. T. Senir, a name of Hermon (Deut. iii. 9) or of a part of it (Cant. iv. 8). [9] Trans. before ἐνώπιον with E. [10] E = καὶ ἐλέγχειν. [11] E adds καί. [12] MS. ων. [13] E = καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματί μου ὃ ἔδωκεν ὁ μέγας εἰς τὸ στόμα. But see note 52 below. [14] If the text is right νοήσει must be taken as under the same government as γλώσσῃ. E = νοῆσαι καρδίᾳ. [15] Read ὡς with E. [16] Add with E the following words which have been lost through hmt.: νοεῖν τοὺς λόγους τῆς γνώσεως, καὶ ἐμὲ ἔκτισεν καὶ ἔδωκεν. [17] MS. εκλεξασθαι.

[1] A gloss. E omits. [2] E = κατὰ τοῦτο. [3] E = ὅτι. [4] E = οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν, and adds εἰς πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας τοῦ αἰῶνος καὶ ἡ κρίσις ἐτελειώθη ἐφ' ὑμᾶς καὶ οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν. [5] E = καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν. [6] For δεσμοῖς we should probably read δεσμίοις. The phrase is found in Lam. iii. 33 אסירי ארץ, LXX δεσμίους γῆς. The phrase here means 'those confined in the earth.' For similar phrases see Zech. ix. 11, 12; Wisd. xvii. 2. There was an obvious paronomasia אסירי לאסר, for G as early as Origen's time had δεσμοῖς. But Origen's words (c. Celsum v. 52) κολάζεσθαι δεσμοῖς ὑποβληθέντας ἐν γῇ show that he could make nothing of δεσμοῖς τῆς γῆς. The corruption most probably arose in the Aramaic δεσμοῖς τῆς γῆς = אֵיפוּרֵי אַרְעָא corrupt for אֲסִירֵי א״. E is defective = ἐν τῇ γῇ. [7] E = ἡμέρας. [8] MS. περί. [9] Beer (Kautzsch, Apok. ii. 245) regards this word as a rendering of יֶתֶר = τὸ κατόλοιπον, which, however, the translator rendered by ὄνησις. But could ὄνησις be a rendering of יתר? Since E is here corrupt but points to κατάλειμμα (see note 23, p. 36), the original Aramaic was probably מְוֹתָר, which = κατάλειμμα or ὄνησις. [10] We should expect καὶ κλαιόντων. [11] Em. from MS. μη, which E follows. The corruption of μή into μήν is found in x. 7. If, however, the negative is original, μὴ λαλοῦντες may be corrupt for μὴ λαχόντες or λαβόντες = לא מקבלין, which should be taken as the apodosis: 'Ye are not to receive.' [12] E = ὅρασις. [13] This word (= perturbabant, and so E) cannot be right. We require a synonym of κατεσπούδαζον. Now ἐθορύβαζον = Heb. יבהלו. In this context the translator should have rendered it ἐτάχυνον. In Aramaic this verb is only found intransitively in this sense, but this may be an accident. [14] This may be an attempt to render אַפְרְחוּ = 'caused to fly.' This Aramaic verb is used by Onkelos to render וַיָּנֹז in Num. xi. 31. On the other hand the LXX gives ἐξεπέρασεν but one MS. ἐξεπέτασεν (as already remarked by Lods in loc.). Now if אפרחו stood in the original, ἐξεπέτασαν may have been an attempted rendering. But in that case we must attach to it a meaning that cannot be justified in Greek. This verb is from ἐκπετάννυμι = 'to spread out,' but the translator of E apparently confused it with ἐξέπτησαν and derived it from ἐκπέταμαι and ascribed to it an active meaning, i. e. 'to cause to fly.' The same wrong meaning is attached to ἐξεπέτασε by the Ethiopic translator of Prov. xiii. 16. On the whole I am inclined to regard ἐξεπέτασαν here as a corruption of ἐξεπέρασαν, as Lods suggests. The idea seems to be derived from Num. xi. 31 πνεῦμα ἐξῆλθεν παρὰ κυρίου καὶ ἐξεπέρασεν ὀρτυγομήτραν.

[1] E = κατεσπούδαζον, or possibly ἔπαιρον. [2] E wrongly trans. into next clause. [3] E = οἰκοδομημένου. [4] MS. γλωσσης. [5] = אַבְנֵי בָרָד (Isa. xxx. 30). [6] E = ἐν λίθοις τοῖς ἐκ χιόνος. [7] E prefixes καί. [8] E = τρυφή. These words are frequently confused: cf. Gen. xlix. 20. It is difficult to decide which is original. τροφή may be right. On the other hand τρυφή is used of Sheol in Sir. xiv. 16 οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ᾅδου ζητῆσαι τρυφήν (בשאול לבקש תענוג). Cf. also Erubin 54ᵃ. [9] Added from E. [10] Seems corrupt. E which gives good sense = ἄλλος οἶκος μείζων τούτου καὶ ὅλη ἡ θύρα αὐτοῦ ἀνεῳγμένη κατέναντί μου καί. Gᵉ appears to be a dislocated form of E. [11] E = καὶ τό. [12] E adds ἐν αὐτῷ. [13] g m q of E = ὑψηλοῦ. [14] E = τροχὸς αὐτοῦ ὡς ἥλιος λάμπων. The expression goes back to Dan. vii. 9 גַּלְגַּלּוֹהִי נור דָּלֵק = τροχοὶ αὐτοῦ πῦρ καιόμενον. The text of E is preferable as to sense. [15] Corrupt for ὅρασις. E seems to have had oros before it and emended it into ὀπός (from ὄψ) 'the voice.'

It is probable that E and G (= καὶ πᾶς λόγος αὐτοῦ ἔργον) are both defective and complementary. The question then arises which is right, G or E? The former seems right: cf. Dan. viii. 17 ἐθαμβήθην καὶ πίπτω ἐπὶ πρόσωπόν μου (Theod.). The same clauses are found in the Secrets of Enoch, xxi. 3 'I was afraid and fell on my face.' Lods well compares Luke xxiv. 5. [1] Better read φλεγομένου with E: cf. Dan. vii. 10. [2] Bracketed as an interpolation. [3] See note 12, p. 40. [4] τῶν supplied from E. So Diels and Flemming. κύκλῳ cannot be connected with the next clause owing to the words ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ. [5] See Slav. En. xxxiii. 4; Ps. cxv. 3. E = οὐδὲ προσδεῖται οὐδεμιᾶς συμβουλῆς. It is probable that this clause, or some equivalent, is lost in G. See note 21, p. 40. [6] E = ἁγίων. [7] E = περίβλημα which is corrupt. Enoch is prostrate on his face: see note 25, p. 40. [8] E = ἅγιον corrupt. [9] Bracketed as an interpolation. They occur in their correct form and place two lines later. If they are in any sense authentic the second ἄνθρωπος must be regarded as an intrusion. [10] E trans. [11] E adds τοῖς ἐγρηγόροις τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. [12] Add with E the following words lost through hmt.: ἐρωτῆσαι περὶ αὐτῶν.

[1] E adds καί. [2] Bracketed as a dittographic rendering. [3] E = πνευματικοί. [4] ἐπεθυμήσατε cannot be constructed with ἐν αἵματι ἀνθρώπων unless it represents some Semitic idiom as צָבָא בְּ. If it could, it would mean bloodthirstiness, an idea quite foreign to the context. The error appears to lie in ἐν αἵματι ἀνθρώπων. This = בדם נָשָׁא which may be corrupt (?) for כְּבָנֵי נָשָׁא = ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Cf. preceding verse ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῆς γῆς ἐποιήσατε. Mr. Cowley suggests a confusion of אֲדָם 'blood,' and אָדָם 'man.' Next the object of ἐπεθυμήσατε may be σάρκα καὶ αἷμα. In that case they should be placed immediately after ἐπεθυμήσατε. But it is better to add καὶ ἐποιήσατε after ἐπεθυμήσατε with E. Thus the restored text = καὶ ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπεθυμήσατε, καὶ ἐποιήσατε καθὼς καὶ αὐτοὶ ποιοῦσιν σάρκα, κτλ. [5] MS. σπερματίζουσιν. [6] MS. αυτοις. [7] MS. εκλειπει. [8] E = ἐν αὐταῖς. [9] E = πνευματικά. [10] E = τά. [11] E prefixes διότι. [12] May be corrupt for σκληρά: see ver. 11. E Gˢ = πονηρά. [13] Added with E. Gˢ has καλέσουσιν αὐτούς. [14] So also E. Corrupt for ἀνθρώπων as in Gˢ. [15] The phrase is possibly a dittography. ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως = ראש מולדת which could easily be corrupted into מוסדה ר״ = ἀρχὴ θεμελίου. In Aram. we may suppose ראש יַלְדוּתָא corrupted into יסודא ר״. [16] See note 13 above.

[1] E = πνεύματα πονηρὰ ἔσονται ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ πνεύματα πονηρὰ κληθήσεται. [2] This verse is merely a repetition of phrases in verses 7, 8. G[s] rightly omits. [3] So also E = ענעע. G[s] has νεμόμενα, which in the sense of 'laying waste' may = רעעו which was corrupted into ענגין. Or νεμόμενα may in the sense of 'pasturing' be a rendering of רעין, which being a corruption of רעעין (so Beer) was itself corrupted into ענגין = νεφέλας. Bouriant followed by Flemming takes νεφέλας to be a corruption of Ναφηλείμ. But νεμόμενα is against this. [4] A gloss. Gˢ E omit. [5] E = τρόμους. [6] So also Gˢ: E omits. It may be a doublet of μηδὲν ἐσθίοντα. If it belongs to the original text it may be a mis-rendering of רעב = 'to hunger,' and should be replaced by πεινῶντα, or better λιμώττοντα. ἀσιτεῖν in the sense of an involuntary fast would be unusual. Beer quotes Wellhausen, *Reste Arab. Heidenthums*², 149 sq., to the effect that the Jinns suffer from a devouring hunger and yet cannot eat. [7] E corrupt = ἀόρατα. See p. 44, note 22. [8] MS. wrongly trans. before καὶ ἐξαναστήσει. [9] E = εἰς τὰς γυναῖκας. [10] Add τῶν γιγάντων with Gˢ E. It is required by ἀφ' ὧν. [11] ἀφ' ὧν must be taken with ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν. It is the Semitic idiom מנפש דִּי בסרהון = 'from the souls of whose flesh.' [12] Add with Gᵍ E πνεύματα πονηρὰ κληθήσεται. See note 1. [13] See note 6 above. [14] These words though not found in Gᵍ or E may be genuine as Lods recognized. [15] See note 9 above. [16] A gloss from Gen. vi. 4? ναφηλείμ is a transliteration of נפלים, and thus a doublet of γιγάντων going before: see Gen. vi. 4. οἱ ἰσχυροὶ τῆς γῆς is an expanded rendering of הגברים and οἱ μεγ. ὀνομαστοί of אנשי השם in the same verse.

[1] E wrongly omits. [2] Add with Gˢ ἐφ' ἅπαξ ὁμοῦ τελεσθήσεται. E = ὅλως τελεσθήσεται. [3] E adds πρότερον. [4] Interpolated (?). E omits. [5] E = ἐξουθενημένον. [6] E adds ὑμῖν. [7] E = γνοφώδη taking γνόφος in the sense of 'whirlwind' or 'tempest,' as in Job xxvii. 20 (LXX). [8] E = ἡ κορυφὴ τῆς κεφαλῆς. [9] E seems corrupt, but may point back to ἄκρα βάθη. [10] E adds καὶ μάχαιραν πυρός. [11] E = παραδεχόμενον. I don't understand παρέχον in this clause. [12] E = καὶ ἴδον. [13] E omits through hmt. [14] E = τὰ ὄρη τῶν γνόφων—a phrase that is derived from Jer. xiii. 16 הרי נשף where the Targ. of Jon. has טוּרי קַבֵּל. In the original then we should have had טורי קבלא. In the text before the Greek translator טורי was corrupted into רוחי. Hence τοὺς ἀνέμους τῶν γνόφων. These mountains are probably those which the Babylonian Cosmogony represents as standing at the ends of the earth in the neighbourhood of the 'springs of the great deep,' which are referred to in the next line. These mountains may again be referred to in lxxvii. 4 where the mountains of the hoar frost are mentioned. [15] E = ὑδάτων τῆς ἀβύσσου πάσης.

[1] E = καὶ ἴδον. [2] Before καί E adds καὶ ἴδον ὡς οἱ ἄνεμοι ἐξέτεινον τὸ ὕψος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ—lost through hmt. [3] Add with E καὶ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ στῦλοι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ—lost through hmt. (cf. Job xxvi. 11). [4] We should probably emend into τὸν οὐρανόν with E. [5] E = δύνοντας in an active sense, and this is probably the right reading here. διανεύοντας has been emended into δινεύοντας (Dillmann) 'whirling,' but so far as there is any sense in this it is already conveyed by στρέφοντας. Swete proposes διανύοντας; but this would require τρόχον, whereas the context requires τροχόν (cf. lxxiii. 2). According to lxxii. 5 the wind blows along the chariot of the sun. Does this imply in our text διαπνέοντας, but this word could not rightly be used in this sense. [6] So also best MSS. of E. Later MSS. = τὰς νεφέλας. [7] Add with E τὰς ὁδοὺς τῶν ἀγγέλων ἴδον—lost through hmt. [8] Added with E. Lost before πέρατα. Radermacher and Diels add περὶ τά. [9] E adds πρὸς νότον. [10] MS. τρις. [11] MS. βαλλοντας. [12] Add τὸ μέν (Radermacher). [13] E = ΙΑCΕϢC. Corrupt (?) for ΙΑCΠΙΔΟC (ישפה) = 'of jasper.' But since ταθεν is the reading of Gᵍ, the Ethiopic translator most probably found merely a corrupt form which suggested some derivative of ἰᾶσθαι as ἰατικοῦ. This word taken in conjunction with ταθεν might point to ὑακίνθου as the original word, or ἰανθίνου. Diels suggests the latter. [14] MS. το. [15] An Aramaic form of פוך. [16] E = πέραν.

[1] This verse is defective. Its complement is found at the close of the chapter: G¹ ἀρχαγγέλων ὀνόματα ἑπτά which should, however, be read as in Gg² ὀνόματα ζ′ ἀρχαγγέλων. Taken together these point to ὀνόματα τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀρχαγγέλων τῶν δυνάμεων. E = καὶ ταῦτά ἐστιν ὀνόματα τῶν ἐγρηγόρων τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων. [2] If the original were Hebrew we might with Lods take κόσμος here to be a rendering of עֲבָא as in LXX, Gen. ii. 1; Deut. iv. 19, xvii. 3; Isa. xxiv. 21. [3] E corrupt = τρόμου. [4] = רעואל. [5] MS. εκδεικων I have emended in accordance with E. See, however, note on xxiii. 4 below. [6] E = καὶ τοὺς φωστῆρας, but G is right. [7] E wrongly omits. [8] Though E = λαῷ, the above is right. Uriel presides over Chaos: see xxi. 1, 2 (xviii. 12). The καί which Gg preserves before ἐπὶ τῷ λαῷ supports this view. [9] E gives acc. of limitation. [10] See Gg² for ver. 8 omitted here and in E. [11] On these words see note 1 above. [12] This phrase goes badly with τεθέαμαι. Is it a gloss due to ver. 4? [13] MS. τον. [14] MS. εκεκων. [15] MS. ο εις τον. [16] See note 8 above. [17] This verse is genuine although lost by Gg¹ and E. This is shown by the ἑπτά in both Gg¹ and Gg².

[1] E wrongly trans. before καὶ εἶπέν μοι and changes into 3rd sing. See note 46, p. 55. [2] E = τῆς ὀδύνης. See note 5, p. 56, and note 41, p. 54. [3] E = καὶ ὧδε. [4] This phrase forms a doublet with εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. Here ενος is a corruption of αἰῶνος. We find the same corruption in the LXX. of Ezek. xxv. 15 ἕως ἑνός. Radermacher emends μέχρι αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων. [5] E adds καί. [6] Here in genitive. But if we follow E we must read στερεάς in acc. MS. εισστερεας. [7] E adds καὶ πλάτος. [8] E omits. For σκοτεινοί MS. gives εισκοτινοι. [9] E adds τῶν νίῶν. [10] The impossible εποιησαν is accurately reproduced by E. The οὗτοι οἱ τόποι (also in nominative in E) may of course be a nominativus pendens. [11] E adds αὐτῶν. [12] Text corrupt: also that of E which = τὰ πνεύματα ἀνθρώπων νεκρῶν καὶ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτῶν. As Lods has pointed out, vers. 5 b and 6 of G show that only a single spirit is referred to. Moreover G has lost πνεῦμα which is preserved by E. Hence read πνεῦμα ἀνθρώπου νεκροῦ ἐντυγχάνοντος καὶ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ. [13] E = τότε.

[32] n omits next three words. [33] q, $t^2\beta$. a–q omit. [34] b c omit. q reads ኦሜጊ: [35] q omits. [36] These two words seem intrusions in E. They are wanting in G. For ዘየዓቢ: of g, all other MSS. read ዓቢይ: q omits next four words. [37] = ἕως. If the two preceding words are alien to the text, then ἕως was corrupt for ἐν ᾧ. [38] g t. m u, β read ዓቢይ: [39] m q t^1 u. g, $t^2\beta$ prefix ወ. [40] Better read as suggested by G መንፈሰ: ስብእ: ምውት: እንዘ: ይስኪ: ወቃሉ: For ሙታን: of g q, u reads ምዊታን: other MSS. ምውታን: a omits ወ before ቃሎሙ: against $t^2\beta$. [41] m reads ውስተ: [42] d omits next verse through hmt. [43] a. β–e read ይእተ: e ወይእተ:

PREFACE

THIS new text of the Ethiopic Version has been the labour of many years. It is practically exhaustive; for no pains have been spared to secure a first-hand and complete knowledge of the MSS. evidence. I have not, however, restricted myself to the mere task of publishing the Ethiopic Version as it is found in the best MSS.; for this Version, even when first made, exhibited many unintelligible passages, which were due either to the mistakes of the Ethiopic translator, or to the corruptions of the Greek text before him, or to the mistakes of the Greek translator, or ultimately to corruptions of the Hebrew text before the Greek translator. With these various sources of corruption I have sought to deal: in some cases, I think, with indubitable success: in others, my reconstructions are at the best merely provisional and tentative. In this work Halévy led the way and made a permanent contribution, but many of his reconstructions were valueless from the outset as they were based on Dillmann's inadequate text of 1853. As a result of these studies I have abandoned the view that Enoch was originally written in Hebrew, and come to the conclusion that, like Daniel, it was written partly in Aramaic and partly in Hebrew.

The Greek and Latin fragments have been printed in parallel columns with the Ethiopic Version and their relations with it have been fully discussed in the Introduction.

The Ethiopic text has been printed directly from a photograph of the chief MS. g with the necessary corrections from other MSS.; but the orthography of this MS. has been nearly always adhered to, although it very frequently confuses the aspirates and sibilants.

In a work of this nature, where sometimes in a page there are 800 acts of collation and verification, mistakes are inevitable, and, where such do occur, I can only ask for the kind indulgence of the student.

My best thanks are due to the late Mme. d'Abbadie for permission to collate four MSS. and photograph two others that were at Abbadia; to the librarian of the British Museum for permission to photograph its ten MSS. of Enoch; to the librarians of the Paris and Munich Libraries for the courtesy with which they lent the Ethiopic MSS. in their charge to the Bodleian Library for my use; to the librarian of the Berlin Library for the loan of its splendid MS. together with permission to photograph it; to the librarian of the Vatican for permission to photograph its MS. of Enoch; to Baron von Westenholtz of Hamburg and Mr. Garrett of Philadelphia for having lent for my private use their MSS. of Enoch through the kind offices of Dr. Enno Littmann; to my niece Madeleine La Vie Charles for much help in making the Index Graecitatis; to Mr. A. E. Cowley for revising the reconstructions of the Semitic original in the first thirty chapters; and, lastly, to the Trustees of the Revised Version Surplus Fund for a subvention towards the expenses incurred in my expedition to Abbadia at the foot of the Pyrenees.

Finally, I cannot conclude without expressing my deep gratitude to the officials, and especially to the readers and compositors, of the Press for their skilled services in the publication of this text.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. The Book of Enoch—its fortunes. Originally written in prose and verse, and partly in Aramaic and partly in Hebrew.

It is seldom that authors attain to the immortality which they hope for, and it is still more seldom that anonymous authors achieve this distinction. And yet it is just such a distinction that the authors of the Book of Enoch have achieved. That such should be ultimately his lot was the deep-rooted conviction of one of this literary circle. He looked forward (civ. 11, 12) to the time when his writings would be translated into various languages, and become to the righteous 'a cause of joy and uprightness and much wisdom.' This hope was in a large degree realized in the centuries immediately preceding and following the Christian era, when the currency of these apocalyptic works was very widespread on account of their distinctively religious and predictive contents. But from the fourth century of our era onward they fell into discredit, and under the ban of such authorities as Hilary, Jerome, and Augustine they gradually passed out of circulation and became lost to the knowledge of Western Christendom till about a century ago. It was not, however, till recent years that the Book of Enoch and similar works have begun to come into their own, not indeed on the ground of their intrinsic religious worth, but from their immeasurable value as being practically the only historical memorials of the religious development of Judaism during the two centuries which preceded the birth of Christianity, and particularly of the development of that side of Judaism to which historically Christendom in large measure owes its existence.

In the course of editing the present work it suddenly dawned upon the editor that much of the text was originally written in verse. This discovery has frequently proved helpful in the criticism of difficult passages.

Another conclusion, to the adoption of which a prolonged study of the text has led the editor, is that the Book of Enoch like the Book of Daniel was originally written in two languages—in Hebrew and Aramaic.

That the Book of Enoch was written in Semitic is now accepted on all hands, but scholars are divided as to whether the Semitic language in question was Hebrew or Aramaic. Only one valuable contribution on this question has been made, and that by Halévy in the Journal Asiatique, Avril–Mai, 1867, pp. 352–395. This scholar is of opinion that the entire work was written in Hebrew. Since this publication, however, fresh evidence bearing on the question has been discovered in the Greek fragment (i–xxxii) found in Egypt. Since this fragment contains three Aramaic words transliterated in the Greek, some scholars, and among them Schürer, Lévi, and N. Schmidt, have concluded that not only are chapters i–xxxvi, but also the rest of the book, derived from an Aramaic original. In support of the latter statement no evidence has yet been offered by these or any other scholars, nor yet has there been any attempt to meet the positive arguments of Halévy for a Hebrew original of xxxvii–civ, whose Hebrew reconstructions of the text have been and must be adopted in many cases by every editor and translator of the book. A prolonged study of the text, which has brought to light a multitude of fresh passages the majority of which can be explained by retranslation into Hebrew, has convinced the present editor that, whilst the evidence on the whole is in favour of an Aramaic original of vi–xxxvi, it is just as conclusive on behalf of the Hebrew original of the greater part of the rest of the book. To determine the exact limits within which each language is used is a task of no little difficulty. This is due in part to the fact that for four-fifths of the text we have only a translation of a translation, and in part to the close affinities existing between Hebrew and Aramaic. For the resemblances between the two languages are so great, that frequently retranslation from the Ethiopic into either is sufficient to explain corruptions in the former. Notwithstanding, there is a clear balance of evidence in favour of a Hebrew original of xxxvii–lxxi, lxxxiii–civ. There is much room for further study of this question, and it is to be hoped that there will be fresh discoveries of MSS. evidence bearing upon it.

§ 2. Greek, Ethiopic, and Latin Versions.

The entire book was translated into Greek and from Greek into Ethiopic about the sixth century of our era, and possibly into Latin. These are fully dealt with in the following sections.

§ 3. The Greek Version. Editions of this Version.

The Greek Version has only in part been preserved. Chapters i–xxxii. 6 and xix. 3–xxi. 9 in a duplicate form were discovered in 1886–1887 at Akhmîm by the Mission Archéologique Française at Cairo, and published by M. Bouriant in 1892. These are designated as G^s and G^{s1}, and G^{s2} in the case of the duplicate passage. Large fragments have been preserved in Syncellus vi–x. 14, xv. 8–xvi. 1, and viii. 4–ix. 4 in a duplicate form. These are designated as G^s and G^{s1}, G^{s2} in the case of the duplicate passage.

Bouriant, Fragments grecs du livre d'Énoch. Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission archéologique française au Caire, tom. ix, pp. 91–136, 1892. This is praiseworthy as a first edition, but the text is disfigured by many errors.

—— L'Évangile et l'Apocalypse de Pierre avec le texte grec du livre d'Énoch. Text publié en fac-simile par l'héliogravure d'après les photographies du manuscrit de Gizeh. Paris, 1893.

Dillmann, Sitzungsberichte d. kgl. Preuss. Akademie d. Wissenschaften zu Berlin, 1892, li–liii, pp. 1039–1054, 1079–1092. These studies are of course good, and several of this scholar's suggestions are excellent. In his comparison of the Ethiopic and Greek Versions he had the benefit of having collations of q t u before him. These gave him no inconsiderable advantage in dealing with the problems before him, though his article takes cognizance of only a limited number of readings where these MSS. furnish a superior text.

Lods, Le Livre d'Hénoch, Fragments grecs découverts à Akhmîm, publiés avec les variantes du texte Éthiopien, traduits et annotés. Paris, 1892. Lods' contribution is learned, scholarly, and judicious, but as he had the misfortune to base his work on the corrupt text published by Dillmann in 1851, a large portion of his conclusions was vitiated from the outset.

Charles, The Book of Enoch, pp. 318–370. Oxford, 1893. In this work I attempted an exhaustive comparison of the Greek and Ethiopic texts, and carried the criticism of the materials several stages beyond previous scholars in this department. An overestimate, however, of the Ethiopic Version led me to make some unjustifiable changes in the Greek text. This error has been set right in the present edition. Notwithstanding, the subsequent thirteen years of study have confirmed most of the suggestions made in 1893.

Swete, The Old Testament in Greek vol. III. Students are very grateful to this scholar for the inclusion of the Enoch text in this edition, but the text as printed leaves much to be desired. It is occasionally unintelligible, where a comparison of the Ethiopic Version would have suggested the true text.

Radermacher, Das Buch Henoch, herausgegeben . . . von J. Flemming und L. Radermacher, pp. 18–60, 113–114. Leipzig, 1901. This text, on the whole, is well edited and forms an advance on preceding editions. But, unless I am greatly mistaken, Dr. Radermacher is not a Semitic scholar. This deficiency in his equipment proved a sore handicap in the task he undertook. How is a purely classical scholar to edit a Greek text which is Greek in vocabulary, but largely Semitic in idiom? To show that our text is of this character it will be sufficient to adduce the following passages: xxii. 9 οὗ ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν αὐτῷ (בו . . . . אשר)='in which there is the spring of water.' xvii. 1 ἐν ᾧ οἱ ὄντες ἐκεῖ γίγνονται (. . . . אשר שם)='where the dwellers become.' Here, it is true, ἐκεῖ could be taken with οἱ ὄντες. xxxii. 3 οὗ ἐσθίουσιν ἁγίου τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ (. . . . פריו אשר)='whose holy fruit they eat.' The editor's failure to recognize this idiom in xvi. 1, has led him to emend the text in such a way as to obliterate wholly its original form. The unemended text runs: ἀπὸ ἡμέρας . . . . θανάτου ἀφ' ὧν τὰ πνεύματα ἐκπορευόμενα ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν.[1] This Semitic construction is supported by E though in a slightly corrupted form. Hence it must be preserved, though as I pointed out in 1893, there is according to E the loss of τῶν γιγάντων before ἀφ' ὧν. This very phrase, moreover, τῶν γιγάντων is found in G^s, though this version inserts after it a gloss (?) containing the names of the three orders of giants as they are given in the Targum of Jonathan on Gen. vi. 1–4.

The text and notes are accurately edited, but there are some errors. In v. 6 Radermacher reads οἱ ἀμίαντοι as an emendation of the corrupt reading which he says is αμα | τοι and not αμαρτητοι, as Bouriant and Lods stated. Bouriant and Lods were certainly wrong, and Dillmann's edition and mine, which were necessarily based on the work of these scholars, shared in their error. The autotype reproduction of the text was not published till after the issue of these editions. But if Bouriant and Lods deciphered the MS. wrongly, so also has Radermacher. It reads αμαρ|τοι. The ρ is partially obliterated, but it is unmistakable in the photographic reproduction of the MS. Hence we should emend αμαρτοι into ἁμαρτ(ωλ)οί. Thus the Christian origin of the words which I bracketed in 1893 becomes still more manifest: Καὶ πάντες οἱ ἁμαρτ(ωλ)οὶ χαρήσονται, καὶ ἔσται αὐτοῖς λύσις ἁμαρτιῶν, and internal evidence confirms the omission of these clauses in E. Notwithstanding, this forms a serviceable edition of the Greek.

Another fragment is found in a Vatican Greek MS., No. 1809, written in tachygraphic characters. This was published by Mai, Patrum Nova Bibliotheca, tom. ii, and deciphered by Gildemeister in the ZDMG., 1855, pp. 621–624, and studied afresh by von Gebhardt in Merx' Archiv, ii. 243, 1872. Besides the above, references to or Greek quotations explicitly or implicitly from Enoch are found in the Ep. of Barnabas (see iv. 3; xvi. 4, 6); Justin Martyr, Apol. ii. 5; Athenagoras in his Πρεσβεία, x; Clement Alex., Eclogae prophet. iii. 456 (ed. Dindorf); iii. 474; Strom. iii. 9; Origen, Contra Celsum, v. 52, 54; In Ioannem, vi. 25 (Lommatzsch, i. 241); Clementine Homilies, viii. 12. Since these last afford but slight help in correcting the text, we shall do no more here than refer to Lawlor's article on this subject in the Journal of Philology, xxv. 164–225, 1897.

§ 4. The relations of the G^s and G^g to each other and to E (the Ethiopic Version).

(a) G^s more original than G^g. These two fragments are closely related and yet exhibit marks of independence. They are closely related, and probably go back to the same Greek translation of the Aramaic text, since they present in so many passages identically the same text. On the other hand G^s has in several passages a different and undoubtedly better order of text. Thus G^s rightly places vii. 3–5 of G^g (or rather its equivalent of vii. 3–5) after viii. 3 of G^g. For manifestly vii. 1, 2, viii. 1–3 precede vii. 3–5. Thus it alone preserves the original order. The angels went in to the daughters of men, who bare to them three classes of giants. And the angels taught their women sorceries and incantations (vii. 1, 2). Then follows a detailed account of the art, which each of the leading twenty angels taught mankind. And after this the giants turned against men and began to devour their flesh (G^s viii. 1–3; G^g viii. 1–3, vii. 3–5). It will be observed that in viii. 3 G^g is very defective compared with

G^s in the list of the offices of the various angels. The additional elements in G^s here could not have been written by a Greek, for in every instance the office constitutes when translated into Aramaic a play on the name of the angel who discharges the office. Similarly in vi. 7 the order of the names of the angels is different and G^s is here preferable to G^g E.

Again, viii. 4 of G^s has preserved in all probability a more original text than G^g E. For it is natural that the substance of the prayer of men as they were slain by the giants should be given when it is first referred to in viii. 4. Here, indeed, G^s presents a duplicate text, and both texts give the prayer in question. G^g E, on the other hand, do not give the words of the prayer till ix. 3, when the angels are presenting it before God. G^s in Semitic fashion gives the prayer in extenso here also.[1] Again the additional clauses (πορεύου κτλ.) in G^s x. 2, 4 belong most probably to the original work but have been lost in G^g E, see p. 24, note 25. The same is true of the addition in G^s ix. 9 with its peculiar diction, as is clear from a comparison of x. 9, 15.

Finally G^s preserves several right readings over against G^g E. Thus δῆσον in x. 11 where G^g E corruptly read δήλωσον, κατακριθῇ in x. 14 where G^g E read κατακανσθῇ. Cp. also x. 7.

(b) Relations of G^s and G^g to E. Even the most superficial study makes it clear that E and G^g are more closely related than E and G^s or G^s and G^g. Indeed the evidence makes it clear that E was translated from a MS. which was also the parent or ancestor of G^g. This follows from the fact that the same corruptions appear in G^g E over against true readings in G^s where this exists. Thus they both give impossible readings in x. 7 †ἐπάταξαν (G^s εἶπον); x. 11 δήλωσον (G^s δῆσον); x. 14 †κατακανσθῇ (G^s κατακριθῇ); xiv. 8 †ἐθορύβαζον (a mistranslation of the Aramaic original), †ἐξεπέτασαν; xiv. 18 †oros (corrupt for ὅρασις?); xv. 9 †ἀνωτέρων (G^s ἀνθρώπων); xviii. 5 †βαστάζοντας ἐν νεφελῇ; xxii. 4 †ἐποίησαν for ἐποιήθησαν; xxv. 5 †εἰς ζωήν; xxviii. 2 †ἀπὸ τῶν σπερμάτων. In ix. 6 all the authorities are corrupt, but G^g E agree closely.

Furthermore, they add xv. 10 against G^s as well as the sense of the passage, and omit the same clause in x. 2, 4 against G^s. To the above facts we should add that E agrees with G^g in transposing vii. 3–5 from its original position after viii. 3 against G^s, as we have shown in the preceding section: also in exhibiting the same defective text of viii. 4.

On the other hand E preserves certain original readings lost by G^g and vice versa. Thus E G^s rightly add αὐτοῖς after ἐγεννήθησαν in vi. 1 and read βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευόντων in ix. 4 where G^g reads β. τῶν αἰώνων, and πάντων τὴν ἐξουσίαν in ix. 5 where G^g reads πᾶσαν τ. ἐξουσίαν, and attest ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις in ix. 8 and εἰς ἀλλήλους ἐξ αὐτῶν εἰς αὐτούς in x. 9, which G^g in both cases omits. Moreover in ix. 11 the corruption in E=τὰ εἰς αὐτούς (for ἐᾷς αὐτούς so G^s) is easy of correction, whereas G^g offers the hopeless αιας. In the following passages G^g omits clauses and passages preserved by E. Thus it omits by hmt. clauses in ix. 1, 5; x. 16; xii. 3; xiv. 3; xv. 2; xviii. 3, 5, 11, and without any such intelligible ground ii. 3, all iii and iv except six words, words and clauses in vi. 1, 5; ix. 8; x. 10, 19, 20; xiv. 14; xv. 4, 8; xvi. 1; xix. 1; xxii. 5, 8; xxiv. 1, 2; xxvii. 1. On the other hand E omits words and clauses preserved by G^g in i. 1, 9; v. 1, 3; x. 1, 2; xiii. 7; xiv. 25; xv. 11; xx. 8; xxii. 2, 5; xxvi. 1.

Naturally G^g and E have severally developed corruptions which it is generally possible to emend in either case by the help of the other. Thus E reads in i. 9 ዘሰዩ፡ for ዘሰው፡; ii. 1 ጠየቁ፡ for ጠይቁ፡; ix. 4 እሰመ፡ for እንተ፡; xii. 1 and 2, xviii. 9 ዝሱ፡ for እሱ፡ See also notes on xiv. 2, 21, 24, 25; xviii. 7, 9, 13, 16; xix. 2; xx. 2, 6; xxi. 7, 9; xxii. 1, 2, 3, 5, 8; xxiii. 4; xxiv. 3, 5; xxvi. 3, 4; xxvii. 5; xxx. 1; xxxi. 2, 3; xxxii. 2. In the following passages E presupposes ὁμοῦ μετά for ὁμοῦνται in v. 6; τὰ μετὰ αὐτά for μέταλλα in viii. 1; ἀνάγω for ἀναγνῶ in xiii. 4; μυστηρίου for μυρίων in xviii. 16; ὡς εἰρηναῖαι for εἰς σειρῆνας in xix. 2; λάῳ for χάῳ in xx. 5; κοῖλοι for καλοί in xxii. 2, 3. Corruptions of G^g will be found in the following passages: i. 2, 3, 5, 8, 9; v. 1; vi. 8; ix. 4, 6; x. 19; xiii. 1; xiv. 6, 8, 13, 15, 18, 19; xv. 8, 9; xvi. 3; xvii. 3, 7; xviii. 4, 7, 11; xxi. 10; xxii. 5, 6, 9; xxiii. 2; xxiv. 3; xxvi. 2; xxxi. 3.[1]

(c) From the above facts it follows that G^g and E spring from a common ancestor which we may designate x, and that this x and G^s proceed ultimately from the same original, the first Greek translation of the Book of Enoch.[1] Hence the genealogy of the above documents might be represented as follows:—

[1] It is noteworthy that E in xv. 9 gives a conflate text based partly on G^g and partly on G^s: also that in xiv. 22 G^g and E do not agree, but rather supplement each other. See p. 40, note 21.

§ 5. The Latin Version and Quotations.

The Latin Fragment, which constitutes a very imperfect reproduction of cvi. 1–18, was discovered in 1893 in the British Museum by Dr. James, the present Provost of King's College, Cambridge, and most kindly placed at my service for publication in my edition of Enoch in 1893. In the same year he issued it in the Cambridge Texts and Studies II, No. 3, Apocrypha Anecdota, pp. 146–150. According to Dr. James this fragment is found in an eighth century MS. (MS. 5, E xiii in Casley's Catalogue of the Royal MSS. now in the British Museum). In this MS. the Enoch fragment is preceded by a penitential edict of S. Boniface, and followed by an anonymous tract 'De Vindictis Peccatorum.'[2]

The text has suffered from additions, omissions, and corruptions, and is very seldom a literal rendering of the original for many words together. Notwithstanding, it makes some contribution to the formation of a better text of cvi.

This MS. further may point to a Latin translation, or at least to a partially completed Latin translation of Enoch; for (1) occurring in the midst of original Latin treatises it appears to have been found in Latin by the collector or scribe of these treatises. (2) It has suffered much

[1] This conclusion hardly seems adequate to explain all the phenomena mentioned on pp. xiii-xiv. These postulate not only the occurrence of duplicate renderings in the Greek translation, but most probably also the occurrence of variants in the Hebrew original. Cf. v. 9; x. 7 (note 6); ix. 4 (note 20); xiv. 8 (see p. xxix); xvii. 7 (note 14: see also pp. xxix–xxx); xlvi. 4, 6 (note 35); lii. 9 (see p. xxxi); xcix. 6 (see p. xxxiii).

[2] In my edition of 1893 the description of the position of this fragment was both wrong and inconsistent. These errors were due not to Dr. James—the source of my information—but to inconceivable carelessness on my own part. When Dr. James rightly disclaimed responsibility in a review of my book, I wrongly maintained, in a rejoinder, his responsibility for the errors in question. I must either have replied without consulting the passage referred to, or else I consulted it but failed to observe its utter absurdity. I did not recognize it till much later.

in the course of tradition, and may, therefore, go back to a date, when the Book of Enoch was not reprobated generally, and when a Latin translation would have been acceptable. (3) It does not show signs of being an excerpt from a collection of excerpts, such as we find in the Greek fragment of Enoch, lxxxix. 42–49; but standing as it does without any introductory note or explanation, it looks as if it had been drawn directly from at least a larger Latin fragment of Enoch.

It is possible that the absurd statement with which the fragment opens—'[Cum esset Lamech annorum tricentorum quinquaginta] natus est ei filius'—originally referred to Methuselah, who was 355 years old when Noah was born according to the LXX Chronology. E speaks here of Methuselah taking a wife for his son Lamech and of a son being born to him.

Latin Quotations. These have been collected most fully by Dr. Lawlor in his article in the Journal of Classical Philology, xxv. 164–225. They will be dealt with at some length in my new edition of the Book of Enoch.

§ 6. The Ethiopic Version and MSS.

The Ethiopic Version has been preserved in twenty-nine MSS. of which fifteen are to be found in England, eight in France, four in Germany, one in Italy, and one in America. Of these MSS. there are only three of which my knowledge is indirect and slight, but not yet too slight to enable me to estimate their value and their affinities with the other MSS. These MSS. are p and z, ꞓz. Of these z indeed was most kindly lent to the Bodleian Library for my use, but unhappily I was absent part of the time of its sojourn there, and whilst I was present the officials of the Bodleian did not notify me of its arrival. ꞓz is of no account as it is merely an exact transcript of b. Next as regards p, this MS. formerly belonged to Lord Crawford and was lent by him to the editor of the German edition of the Ethiopic text of Enoch which appeared in 1901, but since that date this MS. has passed into the hands of a lady, who refuses to lend it or any other MS. in her possession to the Bodleian Library for the use of English editors. Of the remaining MSS. I have directly examined twenty-two, i. e. gꞓgmqtu, abfhiklno, and suvwyꞓaꞓb. Of these I photographed thirteen, i. e. gꞓgmqtu, fhiklno. Five others, i. e. abyꞓaꞓb, I had no need to photograph, as the owners of a₂ b₂ most kindly put these MSS. at my service for the space of two years, while a b y were always at hand for consultation in the Bodleian, to which y had been lent for that purpose by the Munich Library. Of the Abbadian MSS. r s v w I made collations on a number of test passages, while at Abbadia. These readings are appended in foot-notes on these MSS. in the following list, and are sufficient to show the affinities of these MSS. amongst MSS. of the second class. Finally, as regards c d e x I have used Dillmann's collation of c d e and a photograph of x which I procured from the Vatican. Thus for the construction of the present text I have had at my service photographs of fourteen MSS. g₂ g m q t u, the constant use of the five MSS. a b y a₂ b₂, Dillmann's collations of c d e, Flemming's collation of p (which I have used sparingly)—in all twenty-three MSS. Four other MSS. r s v w I have collated sufficiently to determine their character. Of the remaining MS. z (for z₂ may be ignored as a transcript of b) it is enough that we have Flemming's assurance that it is closely related to a b c d e.

The division of Enoch into chapters was made apparently in the sixteenth century. The division into 108 chapters was made by Dillmann without MSS. authority, but as it has been followed by all subsequent scholars it is here adopted for the sake of convenience. The above division is indeed found in one MS., i.e. h, but this MS. was unknown to Dillmann when he made his text. Moreover, the chapters in h vary frequently in length from those in Dillmann's text.

The full list of the MSS. is as follows:—

a. Bodley, No. 4. Large quarto. 40 foll. 3 cols. 105 chapters. Latter half of 18th cent. Enoch only.[1]

b. Bodley, No. 5. Large quarto. 141 foll. 3 cols. 18th cent. (?). Enoch (98 chapters), Job, Isaiah, 12 Minor Prophets, Proverbs, Wisdom, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Daniel.

[1] Laurence issued a transcript of this MS. in 1838. The transcription is somewhat faulty in the earlier chapters. The errors are, as a rule, easy to correct, but, even after the rejection of the obvious errors of the press, a considerable number remains, and the most of these have been reproduced in Dillmann's Apparatus Criticus, and from Dillmann's have passed over into Flemming's text of 1901. In chapters v–x these errors are distributed as follows: one in v. 3; viii. 3; x. 1: three in vii. 1, 2, 5: four in vi. 1, 4, 7 (bis).

d. Curzon MS. Quarto. 91 foll. 2 cols. Enoch (102 chapters), Job, Daniel, 4 Ezra, Sirach.

On foll. 168^{a}–177^{a} a duplicate of chapters xcvii. 6^{b}–cviii. 10 is inserted from another MS. akin to g. See next MS.

g. This MS. consists only of xcvii. 6^{b}–cviii. 10, and is found in foll. 168^{a}–177^{a} of g. It is inserted between the last word and the last but one of xci. 6. It is written by the same scribe, but the text though belonging to the best type differs from g.[1]

The division into chapters is marked in the margin on the first few folios. Enoch, Job, Samuel I and II, Kings, Chronicles, Books ascribed to Solomon, Prophets, Sirach, i–v Ezra, Tobit, Judith, Esther.

u. Abbadianus 55. 191 foll. 51 × 39 cm. 3 cols. of 48 to 50 lines. Possibly as early as the 15th cent. Enoch (without division into chapters) and other works. Text of Enoch much abbreviated after chapter lxxxiii.

v. Abbadianus 99. 70 foll. 23 × 17 cm. 2 cols. 19th cent. Copy made for M. d'Abbadie from a MS. in high estimation among the native scholars. This MS. has all the bad characteristics of the later type of text. Enoch only.[3]

[1] This is a poor MS., but it exhibits a few good readings. Thus it agrees with a, a d in vi. 5^{49} (i. e. note [49]): originally it supported g in right reading against all other MSS. on xvii. 2^{22}: it agrees with q t, β–a b d x on xxxix. 10^{1}, with α–m, d e k l n w ,a on xlv. 3^{28}, with α–q, d e f h k l y ,a on xlvi. 7^{7}, with a e h k n v w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with α, a e f h i k l n ,a on lxxi. 1^{16}, with α, f i l o y ,a ,b on lxxxi. 3^{18}, with α–u, a c e f h i k n on lxxxix. 42^{6}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with α–m, a c d i k l o ,a ,b on xc. 29^{24}, with m, c f h i k l n x ,a on cii. 4^{28}. From the above it is clear that this MS. though it does not follow closely any of the special groups of β, yet it shows some affinity for e and its congeners.

[2] This is a poor MS., but has some notably good readings. Agrees with u, e v x on ix. 8^{21}, agrees with α, d e f h k l n y ,a on xxiv. 2^{40}, with t^2, d e f k l n y ,a on xxix. 2^{31}, with g m u on xxxix. 10^{1}, with g m q, a d f o y ,b on xl. 1^{29}, with α–m, d e k l n w y ,a on xlv. 3^{28}, with α–q, d e f h k l y ,a on xlvi. 7^{7}, with α–q, d e f h k n o ,b on xlviii. 6^{3}, with α, β–b c x on liii. 7^{19}, with α–u, k n on lxii. 9^{15}, with α, i n on lxii. 15^{22}, with a e h k n v w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with e h on lxvii. 3^{26}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with α, a e f h i k n on lxxi. 1^{16}, agrees with h on lxxxiii. 8^{30}, with α–u, c d f i l o y ,a ,b on lxxxiii. 11^{10}, with g m t, a b c f h i k n x on lxxxiv. 1^{24}, with α–g, a e l o x y ,b on lxxxvi. 2^{12}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with g ,g t, b i l o p x y ,a ,b on c. 12^{31}, with m, c f i k l n x ,a on cii. 4^{28}. This MS. so far as it agrees with any special group within β does so with e h.

[3] This MS. which embodies the text approved by the Mamheran or native scholars exhibits most of the vices of the second class of MSS., but some excellent readings. See on lxxxix. 1^{20}, c. 4^{7} below. It agrees with b o x ,b on ix. 10^{3}, with ,a on xvii. 3^{27}, with α, β–a b d w x ,a on xxxix. 7^{24}, with q t, c e f h k l n o y ,a ,b on xxxix. 10^{1}, with g m q, a d f o y ,b on xl. 1^{29}, with c h on xl. 2^{30}, with α–q, d e f h k n o ,b on xlviii. 6^{3}, with α, β–b c x on liii. 7^{19}, with e h on lxii. 9^{14}, with q, β on lxii. 12^{12}, with a e h k n w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with g q, e f originally (?), but with t u, β–e f over erasure on lxiii. 7^{5}, with e h

§ 7. Relations of the Ethiopic MSS.

(a) Two forms of text, α, β, of which β is late and secondary. There are two forms of the Ethiopic text. The first is represented by g a g m q t u (and in some degree by n), which we shall henceforth designate by α, and the second, which owes its origin to the labours of native scholars of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, by all the remaining MSS., i. e. β. The result of these labours has been on the whole disastrous; for these scholars had neither the knowledge of the subject-matter nor yet critical materials to guide them as to the form of the text. Hence in nearly every instance where they have departed from the original unrevised text they have done so to the detriment of the book. But it is not to be inferred from the above that α always represents one type of text and β another on lxvii. 3^{26}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with m, β–i[1] on lxx. 3^{4}, with α, a e f h i k n on lxxi. 1^{16}, with t, d h i x on lxxxiii. 8^{30}, with a b e h k n x on lxxxiii. 11^{10}, with g m t, a b c f h i k n x on lxxxiv. 1^{24}, with m on lxxxix. 1^{20} (here undoubtedly right), with α–u, a c e f h i k n on lxxxix. 42^{6}, with m, b e f h n p x on xc. 29^{21}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with a g q on c. 4^{7}, with m, c f i k l n x a on cii. 4^{28}.

type opposed to the former; for the attestation of neither group is wholly uniform, as each group is divided within itself. This statement holds true in a much greater degree of α. Indeed, the cases are comparatively few where α differs as a whole from β. Fifty readings out of fifty-one which any editor must adopt will have the support of one MS. singly as g, m, q, t, u, or of groups such as g m, g q, q t, g u, g m q, g m t, g m u, &c., and the fifty-first time of the undivided α. For instances of the latter see i. 9 (note 23), viii. 1 (note 34), x. 3 (note 36), 13 (note 28), 17 (note 7), 22 (note 48), xv. 5 (note 24). Moreover, when the attestation of α is divided, the individual or group of α attesting the right reading will often have the support of β or of groups within β. The above facts serve to prove that the recension was not the work of a few years, but was rather a process which culminated in such a text as we find in β, but particularly in the MS. v.

(b) β or groups in β sometimes preserve the original texts. Again it is noteworthy that in a limited number of cases β preserves the original text where α is secondary. Some of these are no doubt accidental, but seventeen[1] such readings in thirty-two chapters are hard to account for in this fashion. These instances are found in the following passages. Thus β is right over against α in vi. 6 (note 43), viii. 3 (note 18), ix. 1 (note 6), 3 (note 18), β–l in ix. 1 (note 7), x. 1 (note 24), b c e f h l^{2} n o against α and rest of β in vi. 6 (note 4), a b x in ix. 4 (note 24), b c o x ,a ,b in xviii. 4 (note 12), d y in xxii. 13 (note 53), h o ,b in xxiv. 3 (note 47), n ,a in ix. 6 (note 10), o x ,b in xviii. 15 (note 32), n single-handed in ix. 11 (note 15), x. 3 (note 37), 7 (note 21), xxii. 9 (note 29). Hence in some cases there is in β most probably a survival of the original text where it has been lost in the present representatives of α.

(c) The character and affinities of the chief MSS. g. Of the MSS. of α, g is decidedly the best all-round MS. This does not mean that it has more unique and right readings than any other MS. of the older type of text, but that when all the good points of the various MSS. are summed up, g comes out an easy first. In the first thirty-two chapters g alone attests the right reading in vi. 5 (note 37), xvii. 3 (note 27), xviii. 7 (note 33), xxi. 5 (note 8), xxviii. 3 (note 11). In lxxxix. 42 (note 4) it has only the support of n, the best of the second class MSS. This MS.

[1] Flemming enumerates only six, and three of these are wrong; for t in these three cases agrees with β: in ii. 1 t is wrongly represented as agreeing with α–t.

has been made the basis so far as any single MS. can of my text. It exhibits much strange orthography and bad grammar, and many corruptions. Notwithstanding it is by far the best representative we have of the ancient text. It was this MS. together with m that I used when emending Dillmann's text for my translation and commentary which appeared in 1893.

ᶜg. This MS., which has already been described, shows certain idiosyncrasies in ciii. 9–15, where it uses the first person over against the third in the other MSS. Outside this chapter it agrees in turn with g, m, q, t, u or with combinations of these or with one or more of these combined with β, but it is most nearly related to g.

m. This MS. is in some respects the weakest of the older group. It attaches itself so closely to g that we must assume its having come under its influence. This fact becomes of importance when we come to chapters xcvii. 6ᵇ–cviii. 10, where we have both g and ᶜg.

Moreover, the evidence is not as decisive as we could wish; for though alone or together with β it agrees in many passages with g (see xcvii. 6 (note 28); xcviii. 2 (note 19) (along with β), 3 (note 29); cii. 1 (note 1), 6 (note 2); ciii. 2 (note 2), 13 (note 15); cvi. 10 (note 6)), yet we find it displaying similar affinities with ᶜg (see xcviii. 6 (notes 13, 15); xcix. 2 (note 2); ciii. 2 (note 51), 6 (note 34), 7 (note 41); civ. 1 (note 5); cv. 2 (note 32); cvi. 7 (note 24), 10 (note 1), 19 (note 34)). On the other hand in the vast majority of its unique readings ᶜg is unaccompanied by m. Hence somehow m has been influenced by the readings both of g and ᶜg. In x. 2 (note 33) and xvii. 4 (note 36) it alone attests the primitive text, in vii. 3 (note 9) alone with f, and in xv. 11 (note 21) with b x y.

q. Though teeming with every form of error incident to the transmission of a text in the way of additions, corruptions, and omissions, this MS. contains a larger number of unique original readings than any other used in our text. Thus it alone preserves the original text in ix. 8 (note 21), x. 11 (note 16), xiv. 1 (note 39), xxi. 2 (note 24), xxii. 9 (note 25), xxiv. 2 (note 41), xxvi. 3 (note 33), xxvii. 4 (note 47), xxxii. 4 (note 31). It approximates more closely to g ᶜg m than to t u.

t. This is a most interesting MS.,[1] as it gives the older type of reading

[1] This MS. is notable also from the fact that for the Books of Samuel and Kings it alone exhibits a third type of text diverging from the two types of text in circulation in Abyssinia. These were the first and primitive type of text and the later or Vulgate. Where this MS. diverges in the text and the later either over erasures or above the line or in the margin, with the rejected words in the text bracketed. The corrector has not done his work thoroughly. Accordingly many of the older readings remain untouched. The work of erasing has been so frequently perfunctory that it is generally possible to decipher the original text. Moreover, in some cases the correction represents a return to the older text. Cf. i. 6 (note 5). As g ,g m are closely connected, so are t and u. t is the least original of the MSS. of the first class. Thus it is hardly ever right alone. For one instance in the first thirty-two chapters see x. 10 (note 3).

u. This MS. would form a good third to g and q but that it is so imperfect after chapter lxxxiii, for nearly one-seventh of the entire book is omitted in the course of lxxxiii-cviii. These omissions are made in the most capricious way. Sometimes words, sometimes phrases, sometimes whole sentences and paragraphs are excised to the entire destruction of the sense. Notwithstanding as u is a valuable MS. I have most faithfully recorded all its omissions and changes. In chapters i–xxxii it alone preserves the true text in iii (note 23), iv (note 33), xxi. 7 (note 40).

n. Of MSS. of the second class n is by far the best. Indeed, though in the main embodying the second type of text it attests more unique and original readings in chapters i–xxxii than m or t or u. Thus it stands alone in giving the original text in ix. 11 (note 15), x. 3 (note 37), 7 (note 21), xxii. 9 (note 29) (?). Alone of MSS. of the second class it gives along with various MSS. of the first class the true text as in i. 3 (note 18), xiv. 21 (note 10), xxv. 7 (note 19), lxxxix. 42 (note 4), &c. Thus n exhibits the characteristics of both types of text.

Remaining MSS. of β. Several of these MSS. go in pairs. Thus a x, d y, e h, o ,b must go back respectively to four common sources, as they respectively attest a vast number of unique readings. With a in a less degree k is connected. e h and o ,b, moreover, have also a considerable number of readings in common, and likewise d l o y.

A study of the notes will show the reader that it is possible to establish partial connexions between other groups of MSS. than those already mentioned, but the further prosecution of this subject does not lead to any valuable results.

from these two classes of text it repeatedly agrees with the Hebrew (Massoretic) text. Subsequently a corrector worked over this MS. and erased readings belonging to the first class, as well as those peculiar to this MS. which were derived from the Hebrew, and substituted readings of the second or Vulgate type. See Dillmann, Bibl. Aeth. T. II. i; Appar. Crit., p. 5.

§ 8. Editions of the Ethiopic Version.

Laurence, Libri Enoch Versio Aethiopica. Oxoniae, 1838. This text was issued simply as a transcript of a, one of the MSS. brought to Europe by Bruce, the great Abyssinian traveller, in 1773. The transcription is not very accurate in the early chapters, though the errors are as a rule easy to correct. In chapters v–x there are ten; most of these have passed over into Dillmann's Apparatus Criticus, and from Dillmann's to Flemming's. As the text advances it becomes more accurate, so that I found its citation by Dillmann to be sufficiently trustworthy for use in the present edition.

Dillmann, Liber Henoch, Aethiopice, ad quinque codicum fidem editus, cum variis lectionibus. Lipsiae, 1851. This edition was based on five MSS. a b c d e, of which a b are in the Bodleian, c in the Frankfort Library, and d e were the property of the well-known traveller, Robert Curzon. Of Dillmann's collations of b c d e I have tested only that of b in the opening chapters, and found only one bad error, in chapter vii. These five MSS. are all of secondary value. The best of them is a. No further work on the Ethiopic text appeared till 1892, when Dillmann (Sitzungsberichte d. kgl. Preuss. Akad. d. Wiss. zu Berlin, 1892, li–liii, pp. 1039–1054, 1079–1092) published some variants from three MSS. on the first thirty-two chapters of Enoch in connexion with his edition of the fragmentary Greek Version.

Charles, The Book of Enoch translated from Professor Dillmann's Ethiopic Text emended and revised in accordance with hitherto uncollated MSS. and with the Gizeh and other Greek and Latin Fragments. Oxford, 1893. This translation was based on a drastic revision of Dillmann's text. Ten new MSS., which belong to the British Museum, were used, three of them, g₁ g m, being of primary importance, and seven, f h i k l n o, being of only secondary. Of these MSS. I collated m, f h i k l n o on about three hundred passages; but g₁ g I collated throughout, on the whole accurately, but defectively, as I now find, in a relatively small number of passages.

Flemming, Das Buch Henoch: Aethiopischer Text herausgegeben von Joh. Flemming (=Texte und Untersuchungen, Neue Folge, VII. i). Leipzig, 1902. Dr. Flemming's text is based on fifteen MSS., a b c d e g g₁ m p q t u v w y. Of these six belong to the first class g₁ g m q t u and the rest to the second class. This editor has been at no little pains in the preparation of his text. Thus he has himself collated g m p q y. His knowledge of t u he owes to photographs taken by Professor Meyer in France, and of v w to collations of the same scholar. It was a fatal error on Dr. Flemming's part that he did not photograph g m q, or, at all events, revise his collations of them.

Flemming's text naturally constitutes an immeasurable advance on that of Dillmann, and a considerable advance on Dillmann's text as emended in my commentary in 1893. With the help of the three new first-class MSS. q t u, this editor was able to point out a few passages where I followed mere idiosyncrasies of g, and also some others where I preferred the less trustworthy of the two texts g, g in chapters xcvii. 6[b]–cviii. 10.

On the whole, Flemming's text is good, as might be expected from so excellent an Ethiopic scholar, and several of his suggestions have been accepted in the present edition. On close examination, however, Flemming's edition proves unsatisfactory from its frequent inaccuracy in the collation of the MSS. generally, and its inadequate collation of the first-class MSS. In my review of this edition in the American Journal of Theology, pp. 689–703, 1903, I have summed up its serious shortcomings under the following heads: (i) Inaccurate and defective collation of the MSS.; (ii) The adoption of inferior readings into the text where the MSS. evidence for the true text is incontrovertible. Flemming's treatment of the great Berlin MS. q on chapters x–xxxii will exemplify his method in dealing with the other MSS. In six passages in these chapters q alone amongst the Ethiopic MSS. preserves the true text of E, as is proved by G. Yet in two of them, xxi. 2 (note 24), xxiv. 2 (note 41), q is not collated at all, and in the remaining four, x. 11 (note 16), xiv. 1 (note 39), xxii. 9 (note 25), xxxii. 4 (note 31), the reading of q is relegated to the notes, and the wrong reading adopted. In x. 7 (note 21) q practically gives the original text (which is preserved by n alone), but the corrupt text is adopted by this editor. (iii) Corrupt passages are left in the text without any attempt to emend them or even to call attention to their viciousness. (iv) Divergencies between G and E are left unexplained. (v) Practically no use is made of the Semitic background for purposes of emendation. Notwithstanding the above shortcomings, Dr. Flemming's edition is deserving of the gratitude of Orientalists, as it constitutes a vast advance on that of Dillmann, and forms on the whole a serviceable work for students generally.

§ 9. Original Language of Chapters VI–XXXVI—Aramaic; of I–V, XXXVII–CIV—Hebrew.

That the Book of Enoch was originally written in a Semitic language is now universally admitted. But what that language is is still a question of dispute. In the past Hoffmann, Jellinek, Dillmann (?) assumed a Hebrew original, and Halévy (Journ. Asiatique, 1867, pp. 352–395) furnished excellent grounds for such a belief, but of late years, since the discovery of the Gizeh Greek fragment, there has been a tendency to assume that the original was written in Aramaic. Neither view can I believe be established, but each appears to be true in part, as I hope now to prove. The proof in certain sections amounts almost to demonstration: in the case of others only a probability can be indicated. The results of present study of this problem tend to show that chapters vi–xxxvi were originally written in Aramaic, and xxxvii–lxxi, lxxxiii–civ, and probably i–v in Hebrew. The original language of lxxii–lxxxii is still indeterminable, but the probability of an Aramaic original seems to be greater than that of a Hebrew.

Chapters i–v. Probably from a Hebrew original. These chapters do not come from the same author or period as vi–xxxvi.

v. 9 (G^{g}) 'They shall not be punished (ܢܬܚܫܘ = κολασθήσονται) all the days of their life.' Since E has ἁμάρτωσιν here, if the text in both cases is rightly transmitted, it is probable that יאשמו stood in the original, and that it was rendered by ἁμάρτωσιν in the text of the Greek translation and by κολασθήσονται in the margin, or vice versa. In the Test. Asher, vi. 1, the converse appears to have happened and the translator to have rendered this Hebrew verb by κολάζονται instead of by ἁμαρτάνουσι.

Again in i. 9 'He cometh with myriads of holy ones' the text reproduces the Massoretic of Deut. xxxiii. 2 (see note on i. 9) in reading אָתָא = ἔρχεται, whereas the three Targums, the Syriac, and Vulgate read אִתּוֹ = μετ' αὐτοῦ. Here the LXX diverges wholly. The reading אתא is recognized as original. The writer of this section of Enoch used the Hebrew text, and followed neither Version nor Targum in reproducing it. Presumably he wrote in Hebrew also. See also notes 1. 9 on p. 10.

Chapters vi–xxxvi. It will be observed in the notes on these chapters that sometimes the Greek is retranslated into Hebrew and sometimes into Aramaic. The reason is that when they were written (in 1901–1902) I was still undecided as to which language was the original. The balance of evidence now appears to me to be in favour of the latter, and this is as follows:—

(a) Aramaic words transliterated in the Greek. In xviii. 8 φουκά = פוכא, in xxviii. 1 and xxix. 1 μανδοβαρά and βαβδηρά = מדברא.[1]

(b) Aramaic constructions. In xix. 2 we have the peculiar Greek αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν τῶν παραβάντων ἀγγέλων. This is a literal reproduction of the Aramaic idiom נשיהן די מלאכיא די חטו. The same construction recurs in E in ix. 8 which = συνεκοιμήθησαν μετ' αὐτῶν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν = שכיבו עמהין עם נשיא. Here G^g, it is true, has omitted μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν. This omission may be due to the unintelligibility of the construction to a pure Greek scribe. It is possible, however, that G^s is right, which connects ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις with the next verb—συνεκοιμήθησαν μετ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις ἐμιάνθησαν. But this is very unlikely; for the natural construction would be συνεκοιμήθησαν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν καὶ ἐν αὐταῖς ἐμιάνθησαν. We have probably a third instance of this idiom in vi. 8 οὗτοί εἰσιν ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν οἱ δέκα, where οἱ δέκα should be emended into τῶν δεκάδων with E. Then ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν τῶν δεκάδων = ראשיהון דעסריתא. This Aramaic idiom has made its way into the O. T. as in Canticles iii. 7.

(c) Some of the proper names with which paronomasias are connected postulate an Aramaic original. Thus in G^s viii. 3 we have ὁ δὲ τρίτος ἐδίδαξε τὰ σημεῖα τῆς γῆς. Now ὁ τρίτος in vi. 7 is Ἀρακιήλ = ארקיאל, where ארק is Aramaic for 'earth.' Again in G^s viii. 3 we have ὁ δὲ εἰκοστὸς ἐδίδαξε τὰ σημεῖα τῆς σελήνης (G^g Σεριὴλ σεληναγωγίας), where ὁ εἰκοστός according to G^s vi. 7 is Σαριήλ = סהריאל. Here סהר is Aramaic for 'moon.' Again in viii. 3 the ὁ ὄγδοος in ὁ δὲ ὄγδοος ἐδίδαξεν ἀεροσκοπίαν is G^g Ἐζεκιήλ (G^s Ζακιήλ) = שחקיאל. שַׁחַק (= ἀήρ), it is true, is Hebrew as well as Aramaic.

(d) Occasionally the source of corruptions in the Greek can be detected by retranslation into Aramaic. I can offer but a few instances of this nature; for though there are many passages which can be restored by retranslation into the original, the restoration can be made equally well in most passages by retranslation into either Hebrew or Aramaic. The evidence, therefore, in this section is not conclusive. It serves to prove, however, the thoroughly Semitic basis of our author.

x. 17 τὰ σάββατα αὐτῶν. Here we should have τὸ γῆρας αὐτῶν. Here, as note in loc. shows, the source of the corruption is explicable both in Hebrew and Aramaic.

[1] On the other hand in xxvii. 2 γῇ is a transliteration of גיא (= 'valley') which is a pure Hebrew word, the Aramaic being חֵילָא. Since גיא, however, is here used as a proper name, as denoting the 'Valley of Hinnom,' its use may be justifiable in an Aramaic document.

xii. 6 οὐκ† ἔσται αὐτοῖς† εἰς ἔλεον. See note on this passage on p. 238.

xiii. 2 ἀνοχὴ καὶ ἐρώτησίς σοι οὐκ ἔσται περὶ ὧν ἔδειξας ἀδικημάτων, 'no forbearance nor †request shall be to thee in regard to &c.' Here שְׁאֵלָא (= ἐρώτησις) was corrupt for שְׁלֵיחָא[1] = ἄφεσις, 'forgiveness.' Cf. xii. 5 καὶ οὐκ ἔσται . . εἰρήνη οὔτε ἄφεσις. Here the Hebrew can also account for the corruption.

xiii. 9 πενθοῦντες ἐν Ἀβελσιαήλ (so E), i. e. Ἀβειλήνη = אבלין באבילין— a paronomasia.

xiv. 6 οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν †ὄνησις αὐτῶν ἀλλὰ πεσοῦνται . . . ἐν μαχαίρᾳ. Here ὄνησις = מוֹתָר, which should here have been rendered κατάλειμμα. In Hebrew יתר also admits of both senses.

xiv. 8 κατεσπούδαζον καὶ † ἐθορύβαζον. Here the second verb is impossible, and we have probably two renderings of one and the same Hebrew word יבהלו accordingly as it is pointed as a niphal or a piel verb. In Aramaic the pael of this verb = θορυβάζω, ταράσσω, or συνταράσσω in Dan. iv. 2, 16; v. 6, 10; vii. 15, 28, and is rendered by Theodotion[2] by one or other of the latter two verbs. On the other hand the LXX renders the same Aramaic verb by κατασπεύδω[3] in iv. 16 and v. 6. Thus the translator of the LXX, who, as we know from the rest of his translation of the Aramaic section of Daniel, was very familiar with Aramaic, assigns to the pael of the Aramaic verb the same meaning as the piel and hiphil of the Hebrew. Hence we may assume that the pael in Aramaic could mean κατασπεύδω or θορυβάζω. Thus we could explain our text as a dittographical rendering of one and the same Aramaic verb.

If there were two verbs in the original, and this is possible, then we have simply a mistranslation of בהל in ἐθορύβαζον.

xvi. 1 ἀφ' ὧν . . . ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν = די מנפש בסרהון. Similar Aramaic idioms are found also in xxii. 9; xxxii. 3. These anomalous Greek constructions can also be explained from a Hebrew background. In xxii. 6 διό in διὸ οὕτως ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ should with E be emended into οὗ in accordance with this idiom. Thus we should have 'whose voice thus.'

[1] Or possible שְׁלֵיוָא = 'rest.'

[2] Two MSS. of Theodotion's text A Q render by κατασπεύδω, but this may be owing to the influence of the LXX.

[3] The translator of 2 Chron. xxvi. 20; xxxv. 21 renders the Hebrew בהל by κατασπεύδω.

The phrase seems to be borrowed from Jer. xiii. 16. If this is so, then G^g which reads τοὺς ἀνέμους τῶν γνόφων = רוחי קבלא. In that case we might suppose that the Greek translator found one word in the text and the other in the margin of his Semitic MS. and rendered both, and that G^g preserved one and the Greek ancestor of E the other. The text in v. 9, where E = κολασθήσονται (or κριθήσονται) and G^g reads ἁμάρτωσιν (which are two possible renderings of the same Hebrew word), requires a similar assumption.

xxviii. 2 πλήρης δένδρων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν †σπερμάτων. It would be absurd to speak of a plain as full of 'trees and seeds.' Here I take ἀπὸ τῶν σπερμάτων = מזרעין, corrupt for זרעונין = 'and of vegetables.' See my note in loc. for other possible explanations.

xxix. 2 †κρίσεως δένδρα. Here κρίσεως = דדינא, corrupt for דריחא (so Praetorius) = εὐώδη. In Hebrew the corruption can be explained equally well.

xxxi. 3 ὅταν τρίβωσιν. These words refer to certain fragrant trees mentioned in the preceding verse. These trees yielded (see p. 70, note 35) a fragrant odour when burnt. Hence it is possible that the Aramaic ידקקון (= τρίβωσιν) is corrupt for ידלקון = καύσωσιν. Thus: 'when they burn it, it is more fragrant &c.'

Chapters xxxvii–lxx, from a Hebrew original. The assumption of a Hebrew original is required by some of the following passages, while others would admit of either Hebrew or Aramaic.

xl. 9 'The third who is set over all the powers is Gabriel.' There is a paronomasia here on Gabriel's name—אשר על כל גבורות הוא גבריאל. This paronomasia is possible also in Aramaic. In the same verse the words 'the second, who is set over all the diseases . . . of the sons of men, is Raphael' = אשר על כל מהלות בני אדם הוא רפאל, contain a reference to the derivation of the name Raphael, which is possible only in Hebrew—רפא 'to heal.'

xlv. 3 'On that day thine Elect One will sit on the throne of glory
And he will choose their works.'

The words in italics are a translation of የኀሪ፡ ምግባሪሆሙ፡ Flemming, after the example of his predecessors, translates: 'wird Auswahl treffen unter ihren Werken.' But this is a mistranslation and would require ኣምግባሪሆሙ፡ Moreover it is absurd to boot. The source of the corruption becomes clear on retranslation. Thus የኀሪ፡ = ἐκλέξεται = the Hebrew יבחר, which might (? cf. Isa. xlviii. 10) itself = δοκιμάσει, or else it is a corruption of יבחן, which normally means 'will try.' Thus we should read 'And he will try their works.' In Aramaic בחר has both meanings. Hence this passage is indecisive.

xlvi. 4^{b} 'He will † raise up the kings and the mighty from their thrones.' Of this verse a dittograph occurs four lines later, xlvi. 5^{a}:

'And he will put down kings from their thrones and kingdoms,' for the parallelism shows that the latter is an intrusion. On the other hand ይገፈትኦሙ = καθαιρήσει = יסיר is right (cf. 2 Chron. xxx. 14), whereas ያነሥኦሙ = ἐγερεῖ = יעיר is wrong.[1] יעיר would then be a corruption for יסיר.

lii. 9 'All these things will be † denied and destroyed from the face of the earth.' Here Dillmann and Flemming try to give a better sense to the passage by rendering ይትኀሐዱ 'werden verschwinden' and Beer 'werden vernichtet werden.' But the word is unexampled in these senses in Ethiopic. The explanation is discoverable through retranslation. E = ἀπαρνηθήσονται καὶ ἀφανισθήσονται. These two verbs are dittographic renderings of the Hebrew יִכָּחֲדוּ.

lvi. 7 'Till the number of their corpses is † through their death †.' እምቶሙ = ἐκ θανάτου αὐτῶν = מִמּוֹתָם, corrupt for מֵרִבּוֹת 'more than myriads.'

lxv. 10 'Their judgment has been determined upon and will not be † reckoned before me.' Here 'will not be reckoned before me' = οὐ λογισθήσεται κατὰ πρόσωπόν μου = לֹא יֶחָשֵׁב מפני where the verb is corrupt for יֶחְשָׂךְ = 'will be withheld' used of judgments and calamities. Thus the text = 'their judgment has been determined up and will not be withheld by Me.' This restoration is possible also through Aramaic.

lxv. 10 'Because of the † months which they have searched out and through which they know &c.' Here Halévy (Journ. Asiat., 374–375, 1867) objects that ኦውራኅ signifies 'months' and never astrology, and that the knowledge of the future could not have been regarded as criminal by the authors of Enoch. Hence he conjectures that חדשים (= 'months') was a corruption of חרשים = 'sorceries.' This conjecture restores sanity to the text.

lxv. 11 'For these there will be no place of † refuge for ever.' Here ምግባእ = ἀποστροφή = תשובה, which should here have been rendered 'repentance.'

lxvii. 13 'These waters of judgment minister to the healing of the body of the † angels. Here, as Halévy (pp. 366–367) has remarked, 'angels' is an impossible reading. It = מַלְאָכִים, corrupt for מְלָכִים 'kings.'

lxix. 13 'This is the † number of Kesbeêl.' The word 'number' is here unintelligible. The context requires some such words as 'office,' 'function.' Halévy's explanation is very satisfactory. He holds that the translator here rendered פקודה by 'number' when he should have given 'charge,' 'function.'

From the above restorations on the basis of a Hebrew original, the majority of which are not possible on the hypothesis of an Aramaic original, the natural conclusion is that the chapters xxxvii–lxx were originally written in Hebrew.

Chapters lxxii–lxxxii. From Hebrew most probably.

lxxvii. 1 'The first † wind is called the east because it is the first: and the second the south because the Most High † descends there.' We have here two paronomasias, one misrendering and one corruption. First of all, as Halévy points out, the Greek translator erred by rendering רוּחַ by 'wind' instead of by 'quarter.' Cf. Ezek. xlii. 20. Next, 'Most High descends' = יֵרֵד רָם, corrupt for רָם יָדוּר = 'the Most High abides,' a play on דָּרוֹם 'south.' Finally, the 'east' = קֶדֶם: hence it is 'the first' קדמוני. In verses 2, 3 there are similar paronomasias.

Chapters lxxxiii–xc, from Hebrew (or Aramaic?). The evidence is here very scanty as yet.

lxxxiii. 11. Here a corruption in text can be emended by retranslation into Greek or Hebrew. See note in loc.

xc. 18 ἠλάλυψεν ἐπ' αὐτούς = ἐκάλυψεν ἐπ' αὐτούς, a clear Hebraism = כסה עליהם. See my note 16 on p. 185.

xc. 38 'The first . . . became a † word.' Here E = ῥῆμα, but the Greek was not ῥῆμα but ρημ—a transliteration of רְאֵם = 'buffalo.' If we were sure that ρημα stood originally in the Greek translation it would be an argument in favour of an Aramaic original; for ρημα would = רֵימָא.

xciii. 8. See note on the Hebrew construction.

xcvi. 6. See note.

xcix. 6. Here E=εἰς ἡμέραν αἵματος ἀδιαλείπτου, but in Tertullian (De Idol., IV) the phrase appears as 'in diem sanguinis perditionis'=εἰς ἡμέραν αἵματος ἀπωλείας=ליום דם לאיד where לאיד is corrupt for לְעַד= ἀδιαλείπτου. So Symmachus renders לעד in Job xvi. 8 where Massoretic has לָעַד.

ci. 4. Here the text rests on a mistake of the Greek translator or else on a corruption in the Hebrew text, whereby מַלְכֵי 'kings' was read for מַלָּחֵי 'sailors.'

SYMBOLS AND BRACKETS USED IN THIS EDITION.

G denotes the Greek Version.

G^s denotes the Greek fragments preserved by Syncellus: where there is a duplicate version G^{s1} G^{s2} are used.

G^g denotes the Greek fragment discovered at Akhmîm, and now preserved in the Gizeh Museum. See p. xi.

E denotes the Ethiopic Version.

⌜ ⌝ The use of these brackets in G^s G^g i–xxxii means that the words so enclosed, though only in one of these authorities, are also in E. Such words in E G^s go back to Greek archetype. In lxxxix. 42–49 and in cvi these brackets simply denote that the words so enclosed in G and L are not in E, but may nevertheless go back to the archetype.

⌈ ⌉ The use of these brackets in G^s G^g means that the words so enclosed are found only in one of the authorities, and may or may not go back to the Greek archetype.

[1] MS. εξαρε. [2] E adds καὶ τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς. [3] Though E omits, the clause may be genuine. [4] To be taken with ἀνεῳγμένη or omitted. [5] E = ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ which gives better sense, and agrees with Num. xxiv. 4 גלוי עינים. [6] ην must either be written ἣν or ἦν. But the context is against the former, and ἦν is quite intelligible. It is to be taken with †ἔχων† as forming a periphrastic conjugation = 'he was †having†.' [7] = אֹחֵז, ἔχειν is found as a rendering of אחז in Job xvii. 9; xviii. 20; xxi. 6; xxx. 16; Is. xii. 8, and it may be so here. Of course אחז could not have stood in the original. It is corrupt for חֹזֶה = ὁρῶν. Our text is thus brought into agreement with E ⲉⲓⲥⲉϩ: and Num. xxiv. 4 (מחזה שדי יחזה) which our author is here using. It is possible, of course, that the corruption arose in G, but it would be difficult to explain how. The passage in E = Ἐνώχ, ἄνθρωπος δίκαιος οὗ ἐκ Θεοῦ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ ἀνεωγμένοι καὶ ἑώρα τὴν ὅρασιν τοῦ ἁγίου. [8] Corrupt (?) for κατὰ τὸν οὐρανόν as in E. [9] Text corrupt. E = ἦν ἔδειξάν μοι οἱ ἄγγελοι. [10] MS. θεορων. [11] So Swete emends from εγω αλλω. [12] Can hardly be right: unexampled in Enoch; E = καί. [13] Corrupt possibly for ἐκεῖθεν as in E. [14] E = σὺν or ἐν τῇ παρεμβολῇ. This is supported also by the parallelism. [15] E = σαλευθήσονται: a sense which accords perfectly with x. 12–14, &c., whereas πιστεύσουσιν gives a sense wholly at variance with all that follows. It is possibly a deliberate change. Flemming suggests πτήξουσιν; see next note. [16] This clause, which E omits, I have removed to the margin as an interpolation at variance with the closing genuine words of this verse, and with all that follows on the fate of the Watchers who were imprisoned beneath the hills. The scribe who added it was possibly thinking of Slav. En. xviii, where the singing of the Watchers is mentioned.

[1] These words are omitted by E and against the parallelism. [2] Bracketed because omitted by E and against sense. [3] A dittography. [4] These two words look like two renderings of the same Hebrew word. [5] MS. μεγα. [6] Cf. Wisd. iii. 9 καὶ ἐπισκοπὴ ἐν τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς αὐτοῦ. [7] MS. γενηται. [8] Corrupt for εὐοδίαν. Cf. Sir. xliii. 26 where the same corruption occurs in MS. B. G thus = יצליחם. So E. [9] This verse though omitted by E is probably genuine, being supported by the parallelism. [10] E = καὶ ἰδού: Jude, Pseudo-Cypr. and Pseudo-Vig. ἰδού. [11] MS. τοις. [12] Interpolated against E and all other authorities. Read ἁγίαις instead of ἁγίοις to agree with μυριάσιν. [13] MS. απολεσει, but the parallelism, Pseudo-Cypr. and Pseudo-Vig. and E require ἀπολέσαι. Other edd. ἀπολέσει. [14] MS. λενξει. Parallelism and Jude, Ps.-Cypr. and Ps.-Vig. require ἐλέγξαι. [15] Undoubtedly genuine though omitted by E. G adds dittographic clause καὶ περὶ πάντων ὧν κατελάλησαν.

parallel columns. That the Latin are versions of Enoch i. 9 and not of Jude 14, 15 was shown by Zahn in 1890. The words, Et perdere omnes impios, Et arguere omnem carnem furnish irrefutable proof of this view.

This being presumed we have to determine the relative faithfulness of the Versions. First of all it is clear that Jude is the least original as it compresses the two clauses (b) and (c) into one, and introduces κύριος after ἦλθεν. Next the Pseudo-Vigilius is defective: phrases are wanting in (a) and the entire clause (β) is omitted. The Pseudo-Cyprian is the most perfect of the three as regards the parallelism, though corrupt in nuntiorum (= ἀγγέλων) suorum, Deo for eo, and wanting in impii after peccatores. Turning now to G we see that it agrees in form with the Pseudo-Cyprian and Pseudo-Vigilius, save that against all authorities it adds after λόγων a clause, which is obviously a dittography. The interpolation in the first line is noticed in the text. Thus the structure is well established: namely, three clauses (a), (b), (c), the last of which is subdivided into two (a) and (β).

On the other hand the infinitives perdere (= ἀπολέσαι) and arguere (= ἐλέγξαι) are right, and this evidence, together with E, shows that we should not read ἀπολέσει and (ἐ)λέγξει in G but ἀπολέσαι and ἐλέγξαι. The parallelism also supports this view.

Having now ascertained the structure and details of the text we approach E and find that it preserves all the clauses, though in the case of (b) and (β) defectively, and of (a) corruptly and defectively. Thus it omits πάντας in (b) and καὶ σκληρῶν ὧν ἐλάλησαν λόγων in (β).

We conclude, therefore, that the original form is to be rendered as follows in English:

I. 9. Behold! He comes with His holy myriads
(a) To execute judgment upon all,
(b) And to destroy all the ungodly,
(c) And to convict all flesh
(a) Of all their works of ungodliness which they have ungodly committed, (β) And of all the hard things which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him.

[1] = δώσετε, whereas G has ἔσται. But since the phrase ትሁቡ: ስመ: ዚአክሙ: ለርግ″ ለጻድ″ is clearly from Isa. lxv. 15 וְהַנַּחֲתֶם שִׁמְכֶם לִשְׁבוּעָה לִבְחִירַי, it is probable that E is right and G corrupt. Again δώσετε is naturally a rendering of תִּתְּנוּ. Is this a corruption of תַּנְּחוּ = καταλείψετε. [2] a–m. m reads መዋዕለ: ሕይወትክሙ: እመዋዕለ: t[2]β ስላመ: [3] LXX has here εἰς πλησμονήν = לִשְׂבָעָה. q reads ርግመት: but originally prefixed በ. [4] m reads ለዙሎሙ: [5] This supposes ὑμᾶς καταράσονται. [6] This should correspond to οἱ καταρώμενοι. [7] Corrupt: q reads ወዘለፉ: t omits next four words. [8] Corrupt for ወብክሙ: g u omit initial ወ. q reads መላእክሙ: e omits ወለ″ together with next word. [9] = ὁμοῦ μετά corrupt for ὀμοῦνται. Thus we should read ብክሙ: ይምሕሉ: = ἐν ὑμῖν ὀμοῦνται which is here = בכם ישבעו = 'by you (the sinners) will invoke imprecations,' i. e. invoke on themselves, if faithless, the evils that have befallen you. Cf. Ps. cii. 9; Jer. xxix. 22; Isa. lxv. 16. [10] g m t u. q, n omit initial ወ. q, t[2], β add ለ. [11] q reads ብርሃነ: [12] n omits initial ወ and adds ለ. [13] q t u, β. g m read ይኩንክሙ: [14] t, β–o. a–t, o read ርግመት: [15] Em. m, a c d e h k l n read ወእመሂ: g q t u, b f o x y ,a ,b ወእመሂ: [16] q u read ጥበበ: [17] q t, β. g m read እሉንቱ: u omits. [23] g m q, β–b x. t u, b x read አበሳ: [24] m q u, β–d. g t, d ወኢይትኬ″. ኢይትኬዙ: = οὐ κριθήσονται = לֹא יֵאָשְׁמוּ (cf. Ps. v. 10). But punctuated as לֹא יֵאָשְׁמוּ the words = οὐ μὴ ἁμάρτωσιν as in G. Or E=ישפטו corrupt for יפשעו=G. In any case the corruption was in the Hebrew.

[1] E = δώσετε. ἔσται corrupt. See note 1 above. [2] See note 3 above. [3] Observe Hebrew idiom. See note 1 above. [4] MS. reads αμαρτοι. [5] The first two clauses which I have bracketed are Christian interpolations. So also Radermacher. The remaining clauses are mainly doublets of ver. 7. E omits.

[6] E omits, but this clause may form the fourth line of the stanza. Radermacher brackets it. [7] Em. by Radermacher. MS. reads καταλυσιν καταραν. E omits clause. Probably a doublet of 7 (c). Radermacher brackets it. [8] Also in Wisd. iii. 9; iv. 15. [9] Doublet of 7 (a b). [10] Em. from αληθειαν with E ⲈⲘⲞ: In ver. 7 ἀσεβέσιν is rendered by the adjective from this root ⲈⲘⲞⲨⲦ: and in x. 20 ἀσεβείας is again rendered as here by ⲈⲘⲞ: Hence there is no justification for the various emendations of λήθην, ἄγνοιαν, &c. There is something to be said for ἀμάθειαν (Radermacher). [11] E = οἱ δὲ τὴν σοφίαν ἔχοντες πραεῖς ἔσονται. G is here like an Alexandrian addition.

aefhklnpx a corruption of ወስተ: In the next place the ደብረ: is supported by β but omitted by α. In this passage, as Hallévi (Journ. Asiat., 1867, pp. 356–7) has pointed out, there is a play on the name Jared if we retranslate into Hebrew יֵרְדוּ בְיֹמֵי יֶרֶד. We can hardly help assuming, therefore, that this part of the text is ultimately derived from a Hebrew source, though on other grounds we are obliged to postulate an Aramaic original of most of vi–xxxvi. x omits next three words. [1] g reads ወጸውዖ: (sic). [2] q omits. We should expect ደብር: [3] We have here again a paronomasia אחרימו . . . הֶרְמוֹן. This play originated probably first in Hebrew like that in n. 43, p. 13. [4] bcefhl[2]no and G[s]. α, adl(r)y ,a omit. [5] q omits. [6] q. g reads ሴሚ: አዛዚ: m, β–de ስምያዛ: tu ሴምአዛዝ: d ሲሚ". e ስሚአዛ: The word is from שְׁמְעוֹא or שְׁמְחוֹאי. [7] α–q. So G[s] οὗτος. qβ read ዘ. [8] gmu save that mu read as one word and g divides into two after ኪ, and the three MSS. omit the final ል. q reads አራክብራኤሚ: t, l አራኪበራሜኤል: save that l reads ማ for ሚ. a ኡራኪበርሜኤል: dkn "ራሚኤል: bcefhnox ,a ,b "ራሜኤል: l አራኪበራማኤል: Here ራሚኤል: probably corrupt for አራኪኤል: Thus we have in G[s] Ἀρακιήλ (cf. Ῥακιήλ no. 20 in G[s]); and again in G[s] in viii. 3 where it is speaking of Ἀρακιήλ we have ὁ δὲ τρίτος ἐδίδαξεν τὰ σημεῖα τῆς γῆς. Thus Ἀρακιήλ = ארקיאל where ארק = earth. This angel is mentioned as unfallen in Sib. Or. II. 215–17. Κιμβρά is corrupt. [9] gm. q reads ኮበባኤል: tu ኮከብ". β አኪቤኤል: save that l reads ኬ for ኪ. The name is from כוכביאל = 'star of God.' [10] mqtu, β–eo ,a. g reads ጥሚኤል: eo ,a ጣሚ". The name = תומיאל 'the perfection of God' (Schwab, Vocabulaire de l'angélologie d'après les MSS. Hébreux, p. 375). [11] t. g reads ራማኤል: m ራም". q, β ራሙ". This angel is referred to in Apoc. Baruch lv. 3, where see my note. [12] gmq, acdefhkln,a. t reads አዛቂኤል: bx አዝቂኤል: ("ቂኤል: x). o ኤዜቂ". u illegible. Since G[s] viii. 3 writes ὁ δὲ ὄγδοος ἐδίδαξεν ἀεροσκοπίαν this word comes from שְׁחַק. שְׁחַק is rendered by ἀήρ in 2 Ki. xxii. 12; Ps. xviii. 11 (Beer). [13] gm. q reads በራቂያል: t ባራቅኤል: aefhko,b ስራቂያል: bcdln,a "ቂያል: x "ቂኤል: The word = ברקיאל. [14] g, β–kl. m, kl read አስኤል: q አራስኤል: t አሳሒል: The word = עזאל (Schwab), but see other forms in Appendix. [15] gq, n. m reads አርመርስ: t አርሜርስ: u illegible. β–e አርምርስ: e አርሞርስ: Since G[s] viii. 3 writes with reference to this angel ὁ δὲ ἑνδέκατος Φαρμαρὸς ἐδίδαξεν . . . ἐπαοιδάς . . . καὶ ἐπαοιδῶν λυτήρια the name may be derived from חרם

[1] On these names see other Table in the Appendix. [2] The manuscript reading seems corrupt for ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν τῶν δεκάδων, a literal rendering of ראשיהן דעשרתא. We have an undoubted case of this in xix. 2 αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν τῶν . . . ἀγγέλων. Radermacher proposes ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν οἱ (ἐπὶ) δέκα, but this would mean 'their chiefs over ten (angels).' [1] E = μίγνυσθαι. See note 2 on p. 16. [2] MS. reads εν. [3] E = ὥστε. [4] E = ἐτράπησαν, of which ἐτόλμησαν seems a corruption. [5] MS. μεγαλα. [6] Gˢ has στιλβειν which is corrupt. See note 8 below. The Aram. was prob. צרירא. Cf. 2 Kings ix. 30; Jer. iv. 30: Heb. פוך. [7] These clauses, though omitted by E and Gᵉ, go back to the original. That three classes of giants were mentioned in this chapter is presupposed by lxxxvi. 4; lxxxviii. 2. Moreover, Jubilees vii. 21–22 is based on this passage: 'The Watchers took unto themselves wives . . . and they begat sons the Nâphîdîm . . . and they devoured one another, and the Giants slew the Nâphîl and the Nâphîl slew the Eljô and the Eljô mankind.' In ver. 24 of the same chapter, Jubilees quotes the greater part of viii. 5 of E and Gᵉ. Hence, whereas Gˢ omits vii. 3–6 and E and Gᵉ omit portions of vii. 2 which Gˢ preserves, both texts are here defective. The three classes of giants go back to Gen. vi. 4. The Γίγαντες = נְפִלִים, the Ναφηλείμ = נְפִילִים, and the Ἐλιούδ the אֲנָשֵׁי הַשֵּׁם. ἐτέκνωσαν and τοῖς N″ ἐγεννήθησαν may be corrupt. We should expect according to Jub. vii. 22 ἔκτειναν and οἱ N″ ἔκτειναν. [8] Corrupt: στιβίζειν (Diels).

[1] Since Gˢ has τὸ καλλωπίζειν the Aram. may have been simply מְשַׁפֵּר. [2] E adds τὰ μέταλλα τῆς γῆς—a doublet. See note 30, p. 16. Observe that τῆς γῆς is found in Gˢ but not in Gᵍ. First of all we see from G^{gs} that እሉ: ይትገበሩ: (g t, n. Other MSS. read እሉ: ይትገበራ:) should be trans. after በሰማያት: and that ይትገ" = ἐπιτηδεύουσιν or rather ought to. Hence we must read either ይገብሩ: or preferably ይትገበሩ: ምግባር: is a not unusual rendering of ἐπιτήδευμα. Cf. Lev. xviii. 3 (twice); Deut. xxviii. 20; Jer. iv. 18; vii. 3, &c. ἐπιτηδεύειν may mean 'to practise,' or rarely as in Herod. iv. 170; 3 Macc. ii. 14 'to attempt,' 'try.' I take this to be its most probable meaning here. Next comes ወ(a omits)አመረ: (= ἐγνώρισε) which is a corruption of q which reads አእመረ: = ἔγνω. Finally ሰብኤ: (q u: so G^{g}) alone is right. g m wrongly read ሰበአ: t ለሰብኤ: t^{2} β ሰብዕታ: Thus E = (τὰ) ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ἃ ἐπιτηδεύουσιν ἔγνω ἄνθρωποι, and we see that E faithfully reproduced the impossible text of G^{g}. For further critical restoration of the text see note 4, p. 23. E should be restored as follows (ዘ)በሰማያት: እሉ: ይትገበሩ: አእምሮ: ሰብኤ: or instead of አእምሮ: possibly ወይትኃጕሉ: (see note 4, p. 23). [16] I have supplied ወዘ. G^{g} supports ወ. In no case may the evils which precede be attributed to ስምያዛ: They are all due to the agency of አዛዝኤል: See x. 7, 8. [17] q reads አንተ: [18] g m t, β. q u read ወሀብክ: [19] m omits. [20] d y read in the singular. [21] q. g m t^{1} read በደቡ: ሰብኤ: (+በደቡ: ምድር: m originally) where ሰ" may be corrupt for የብስ: u, e (v) x omit. β–e read ጎቡረ: which t^{2} adds in marg. [22] = μετ' αὐτῶν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν = עמהין עם נשיא; for እልኩ: is only a rendering of the Greek article. Here E may be right, reproducing as it does the Aramaic idiom. G^{g} omits the difficult μετὰ τῶν θ., and G^{s} trans. it after καί and connects it with ἐμιάνθησαν. But G^{s} seems right: cf. x. 11; xii. 4; xv. 3; vii. 1. For ምስለ: which q omits, b l n read ለ, and for ምስለ: and next two words x reads ጎቡረ: [23] So also G^{g}. On text of G^{s} see note 22. For ወረዙሱ: d reads "ሰ: and y "ሳ: [24] t. g q read እሎንቱ: ዙሎ: m ሎቱ: ዙሎ: u omits. β reads ሎን: እሎንቱ: [25] a. β reads ኃጣውኦ: [26] a, c d y $_{a}$. a e h k l (v) b read ወአንስቲኒ: b n x ወአንስት: f o አንስትኒ: [27] g m t, a b c d e f h k o x a. q u, l n $_{b}$ read ረዐ". [28] g. m t read በዝ: q ወእምዝ: u, β ወበዝ: [29] q reads መልኡ: [30] t, β–b g m q u read ዙሎ: ምድር: b ምድር: ዙላ: [31] q reads ደም:

[1] E Gˢ = πάντων. [2] Gᵍ omits through hmt. καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ὃ κρυβῆναί σε δύναται. ὁρᾷς against E Gˢ. [3] See note 10, p. 22. [4] E presupposes (see note 15, p. 22) exactly this impossible text save that it reads ἔγνω or ἐγνώρισεν for ἔγνωσαν. If we insert καί before ἔγ. with Swete and Radermacher we arrive at a wholly unsatisfactory sense. Hence as Gˢ reads εἰδέναι it may be best here to read γνῶναι and regard the corruption as native to Gᵍ. Thus we arrive at an excellent sense 'which men were trying to know.' On the other hand a different meaning of ἐπιτηδεύειν 'to practise' is presupposed by Gˢ. See note 10. If we are bound to accept this meaning, then some corruption seems to lie behind ἔγνωσαν = ידעו (or יידעון) and εἰδέναι = מידע. These may be corruptions of an original וייבדון = καὶ ἀπόλλυνται. This gives a good sense: 'which men are practising and so are perishing,' i. e. by the practice of which men are being destroyed: and thus the text is brought into line with x. 7 ἵνα μὴ ἀπόλωνται πάντες οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐν τῷ μυστηρίῳ, κ.τ.λ., and x. 8 ἠρημώθη . . ἡ γῆ . . ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τῆς διδασκαλίας Ἀζαήλ. [5] Add ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις with E Gˢ. [6] Gˢ = καί. [7] See note 1 above. [8] See note 2 above. [9] E Gᵍ = καὶ ἐδήλωσεν τὰ μυστήρια τοῦ αἰῶνος. [10] Here Gˢ means 'they practise (Azazel's) practices in order to know the mysteries.' This is possible, but unlikely. [11] Corrupt. E Gᵍ = καὶ Σεμιαζᾶς. [12] Corrupt for ἄρχειν (Raderm.).

All are corruptions either of 'Ισραήλ (Gᴇ) or Οὐριήλ (Gˢ). The latter only belongs to the original: cf. lxxxix. 1. [24] β–l. a, l omit. But the text is supported by G. Thus Gᴇ has καὶ εἶπεν, though it has wrongly trans. it before καὶ ἔπεμψεν, and Gˢ has λέγων rightly at the close of ver. 1. [25] Supplied from Gˢ. This phrase belongs to the original text though already lost in the Greek archetype of E. It belongs to the original; for it is preserved in Gˢ, and each new command issued to the angels begins with the word 'go.' Cf. Gˢ x. 2, 4, 11. Gᴇ and E are defective in the first two passages. [26] e omits. [27] g q read ለስመ: [28] u reads ፍጹመ: [29] g m. q u read ይትሐ". t, β ትትኃ" or ትትኀ". from two possible renderings of ארעא which punctuated as אַרְעָא = γῆ, and as אַרְעָא = πληγή. [5] MS. μην. [6] Here ἐπάταξαν = אַבְּרוּ corrupt for אמרו = εἶπον as we have in Gˢ; conversely in 2 Chron. xxii. 10 תְּרַבֵּר = εἶπεν is an error for תְּאַבֵּד = ἀπώλεσεν. Bouriant's conjecture ἐπέτασαν which I formerly followed is impossible. ἐπέτασαν cannot be used in this sense. [7] Gᵍ E omit. [8] E = τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ τῶν ἔργων. [9] κίβδηλος here seems to represent שַׂעֲטְנֵיזָא (cf. Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxii. 11) or some derivative of it as representing beings who are derived from two distinct classes of creatures. E took it as = ἀδόκιμος. [10] E = πόρνης, corrupt for πορνείας. [11] E adds τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς πόρνης καί. [12] E adds ἐξαπόστειλον αὐτοὺς καί—a dittographic rendering. [13] Add εἰς ἀλλήλους with Gˢ E. [14] Gᵍ E = ἄγγελοι. [15] See note 4 above. [16] Gᵍ αὐτῷ. [17] So also E. Gᵍ omits.

[1] MS. εργεσις. Em. by Lods. [2] = E. Read δέσμωσον as Radermacher suggests and change datives into accusatives. Perhaps G^g E go back to אמר corrupt for אסר = δῆσον. But Radermacher's conjecture seems right. The corruption of δέσμωσον (or δέσμευσον) into δήλωσον is native to G^g; for the original acc. μιγέντας still remains. [3] E = καὶ συγκλειθήσονται εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας—a free rendering of the text. [4] Em. with G^s from οταν: E = ὅταν. [5] = E. Corrupt for κατακριθῇ as in G^s. [6] Add with E καὶ ἔσται εὐλογία· τὰ ἔργα τῆς δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας lost through hmt.

[1] = שַׁבַּתָּהוֹן in which the word is wrongly vocalized for שִׁבְתָּהוֹן = 'their old age.' The error is explicable in Heb. also שַׁבָּתָם instead of שִׁבְתָּם (Wellhausen, Skizzen vi. pp. 241, 260). Hence read τὸ γῆρας αὐτῶν. [2] Appears to be intransitive here. E renders it transitively and puts the preceding nominatives in the accusative. [3] Corrupt. I cannot restore the text. 'Tree of joy' (as in E) is an expression not found elsewhere. πάντα τὰ δένδρα τῆς γῆς ἀγαλλιάσονται = כל־אילן ארעא יֶחְדֵי. The last two words may be corrupt for יאה בחֵיזוּ = 'goodly in appearance.' Thus we should have πάντα τὰ δένδρα ὡραῖα τῷ εἴδει. At any rate G and E are corrupt. Φυτευθήσεται may be an intrusion. [4] Text is translateable but seems corrupt. E = καὶ πᾶς ὁ σπόρος ὁ σπαρεὶς ἐν αὐτῇ ἕκαστον μέτρον ποιήσει χιλιάδας καὶ ἕκαστον μέτρον. The opening phrase is a nominativus pendens. [5] E = ἀδικίας. [6] E adds πάσης. [7] E adds ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς 21. καὶ ἔσονται πάντες οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων δίκαιοι. [8] E adds ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν. [9] E trans. [10] E = αἰώνων a wrong expansion of $\overline{\text{ανπων}}$ which appears in G.

[1] MS. αὐτῶν. [2] E corrupt = ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις. [3] Εὐλογεῖν used with dat. in Sir. l. 22; li. 12, &c. [4] Add with E τὸν γραμματέα καὶ εἶπον ἐμοί Ἐνώχ lost through hmt. [5] E = ἐποίησαν or πεποιήκεσαν. [6] MS. καιηφανισατε. Seems corrupt for ἀφ. μέγ. κατηφάνισαν. It is most unlikely that we should have here a piece of the oratio recta. E = καὶ ἀφ. μέγ. ἠφανίσθησαν but see note 23, p. 32. [7] E = αὐτοῖς which appears right. [8] A strange construction. [9] Corrupt for πορευθεὶς εἶπεν as is shown by E and G xiii. 3. The corruption in G may have originated in the Aram. G = אמר אויל corrupt for אזל ואמר. Here we may conclude either to a happy emendation of the Ethiopic translator of G or of the scribe of the Greek MS. used by E or to the existence in the Aramaic of both forms, the corrupt in the text and the true reading in the margin. [10] E adds ἐμέ. [11] MS. γενονται. [12] MS. αναγνοι. E = ἀνάγω corrupt for ἀναγνῶ.

[1] E = περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν περὶ ὧν κατεκρίθησαν. [2] E wrongly omits. [3] E gives the right order = δεξιῶν δύσεως Ἑρ. [4] Em. with E from ως. [5] E = ἵνα εἴπω. [6] E = καὶ ἐλέγξω. [7] Since E = Ἀβελσιαήλ it is not improbable that we have here a corruption of Ἀβειλήνη a town in the Antilibanus, which could be loosely described as lying between Lebanon and Senir, i.e. Hermon. There was a play of words in text. The angels were mourning (אבלין) in Abilene (אבילין). [8] The O. T. Senir, a name of Hermon (Deut. iii. 9) or of a part of it (Cant. iv. 8). [9] Trans. before ἐνώπιον with E. [10] E = καὶ ἐλέγχειν. [11] E adds καί. [12] MS. ων. [13] E = καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματί μου ὃ ἔδωκεν ὁ μέγας εἰς τὸ στόμα. But see note 52 below. [14] If the text is right νοήσει must be taken as under the same government as γλώσσῃ. E = νοῆσαι καρδίᾳ. [15] Read ὡς with E. [16] Add with E the following words which have been lost through hmt.: νοεῖν τοὺς λόγους τῆς γνώσεως, καὶ ἐμὲ ἔκτισεν καὶ ἔδωκεν. [17] MS. εκλεξασθαι.

[1] A gloss. E omits. [2] E = κατὰ τοῦτο. [3] E = ὅτι. [4] E = οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν, and adds εἰς πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας τοῦ αἰῶνος καὶ ἡ κρίσις ἐτελειώθη ἐφ' ὑμᾶς καὶ οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν. [5] E = καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν. [6] For δεσμοῖς we should probably read δεσμίοις. The phrase is found in Lam. iii. 33 אסירי ארץ, LXX δεσμίους γῆς. The phrase here means 'those confined in the earth.' For similar phrases see Zech. ix. 11, 12; Wisd. xvii. 2. There was an obvious paronomasia אסירי לאסר, for G as early as Origen's time had δεσμοῖς. But Origen's words (c. Celsum v. 52) κολάζεσθαι δεσμοῖς ὑποβληθέντας ἐν γῇ show that he could make nothing of δεσμοῖς τῆς γῆς. The corruption most probably arose in the Aramaic δεσμοῖς τῆς γῆς = אֵיפוּרֵי אַרְעָא corrupt for אֲסִירֵי א״. E is defective = ἐν τῇ γῇ. [7] E = ἡμέρας. [8] MS. περί. [9] Beer (Kautzsch, Apok. ii. 245) regards this word as a rendering of יֶתֶר = τὸ κατόλοιπον, which, however, the translator rendered by ὄνησις. But could ὄνησις be a rendering of יתר? Since E is here corrupt but points to κατάλειμμα (see note 23, p. 36), the original Aramaic was probably מְוֹתָר, which = κατάλειμμα or ὄνησις. [10] We should expect καὶ κλαιόντων. [11] Em. from MS. μη, which E follows. The corruption of μή into μήν is found in x. 7. If, however, the negative is original, μὴ λαλοῦντες may be corrupt for μὴ λαχόντες or λαβόντες = לא מקבלין, which should be taken as the apodosis: 'Ye are not to receive.' [12] E = ὅρασις. [13] This word (= perturbabant, and so E) cannot be right. We require a synonym of κατεσπούδαζον. Now ἐθορύβαζον = Heb. יבהלו. In this context the translator should have rendered it ἐτάχυνον. In Aramaic this verb is only found intransitively in this sense, but this may be an accident. [14] This may be an attempt to render אַפְרְחוּ = 'caused to fly.' This Aramaic verb is used by Onkelos to render וַיָּנֹז in Num. xi. 31. On the other hand the LXX gives ἐξεπέρασεν but one MS. ἐξεπέτασεν (as already remarked by Lods in loc.). Now if אפרחו stood in the original, ἐξεπέτασαν may have been an attempted rendering. But in that case we must attach to it a meaning that cannot be justified in Greek. This verb is from ἐκπετάννυμι = 'to spread out,' but the translator of E apparently confused it with ἐξέπτησαν and derived it from ἐκπέταμαι and ascribed to it an active meaning, i. e. 'to cause to fly.' The same wrong meaning is attached to ἐξεπέτασε by the Ethiopic translator of Prov. xiii. 16. On the whole I am inclined to regard ἐξεπέτασαν here as a corruption of ἐξεπέρασαν, as Lods suggests. The idea seems to be derived from Num. xi. 31 πνεῦμα ἐξῆλθεν παρὰ κυρίου καὶ ἐξεπέρασεν ὀρτυγομήτραν.

[1] E = κατεσπούδαζον, or possibly ἔπαιρον. [2] E wrongly trans. into next clause. [3] E = οἰκοδομημένου. [4] MS. γλωσσης. [5] = אַבְנֵי בָרָד (Isa. xxx. 30). [6] E = ἐν λίθοις τοῖς ἐκ χιόνος. [7] E prefixes καί. [8] E = τρυφή. These words are frequently confused: cf. Gen. xlix. 20. It is difficult to decide which is original. τροφή may be right. On the other hand τρυφή is used of Sheol in Sir. xiv. 16 οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ᾅδου ζητῆσαι τρυφήν (בשאול לבקש תענוג). Cf. also Erubin 54ᵃ. [9] Added from E. [10] Seems corrupt. E which gives good sense = ἄλλος οἶκος μείζων τούτου καὶ ὅλη ἡ θύρα αὐτοῦ ἀνεῳγμένη κατέναντί μου καί. Gᵉ appears to be a dislocated form of E. [11] E = καὶ τό. [12] E adds ἐν αὐτῷ. [13] g m q of E = ὑψηλοῦ. [14] E = τροχὸς αὐτοῦ ὡς ἥλιος λάμπων. The expression goes back to Dan. vii. 9 גַּלְגַּלּוֹהִי נור דָּלֵק = τροχοὶ αὐτοῦ πῦρ καιόμενον. The text of E is preferable as to sense. [15] Corrupt for ὅρασις. E seems to have had oros before it and emended it into ὀπός (from ὄψ) 'the voice.'

[1] Better read φλεγομένου with E: cf. Dan. vii. 10. [2] Bracketed as an interpolation. [3] See note 12, p. 40. [4] τῶν supplied from E. So Diels and Flemming. κύκλῳ cannot be connected with the next clause owing to the words ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ. [5] See Slav. En. xxxiii. 4; Ps. cxv. 3. E = οὐδὲ προσδεῖται οὐδεμιᾶς συμβουλῆς. It is probable that this clause, or some equivalent, is lost in G. See note 21, p. 40. [6] E = ἁγίων. [7] E = περίβλημα which is corrupt. Enoch is prostrate on his face: see note 25, p. 40. [8] E = ἅγιον corrupt. [9] Bracketed as an interpolation. They occur in their correct form and place two lines later. If they are in any sense authentic the second ἄνθρωπος must be regarded as an intrusion. [10] E trans. [11] E adds τοῖς ἐγρηγόροις τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. [12] Add with E the following words lost through hmt.: ἐρωτῆσαι περὶ αὐτῶν.

[1] E adds καί. [2] Bracketed as a dittographic rendering. [3] E = πνευματικοί. [4] ἐπεθυμήσατε cannot be constructed with ἐν αἵματι ἀνθρώπων unless it represents some Semitic idiom as צָבָא בְּ. If it could, it would mean bloodthirstiness, an idea quite foreign to the context. The error appears to lie in ἐν αἵματι ἀνθρώπων. This = בדם נָשָׁא which may be corrupt (?) for כְּבָנֵי נָשָׁא = ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Cf. preceding verse ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῆς γῆς ἐποιήσατε. Mr. Cowley suggests a confusion of אֲדָם 'blood,' and אָדָם 'man.' Next the object of ἐπεθυμήσατε may be σάρκα καὶ αἷμα. In that case they should be placed immediately after ἐπεθυμήσατε. But it is better to add καὶ ἐποιήσατε after ἐπεθυμήσατε with E. Thus the restored text = καὶ ὥσπερ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπεθυμήσατε, καὶ ἐποιήσατε καθὼς καὶ αὐτοὶ ποιοῦσιν σάρκα, κτλ. [5] MS. σπερματίζουσιν. [6] MS. αυτοις. [7] MS. εκλειπει. [8] E = ἐν αὐταῖς. [9] E = πνευματικά. [10] E = τά. [11] E prefixes διότι. [12] May be corrupt for σκληρά: see ver. 11. E Gˢ = πονηρά. [13] Added with E. Gˢ has καλέσουσιν αὐτούς. [14] So also E. Corrupt for ἀνθρώπων as in Gˢ. [15] The phrase is possibly a dittography. ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως = ראש מולדת which could easily be corrupted into מוסדה ר״ = ἀρχὴ θεμελίου. In Aram. we may suppose ראש יַלְדוּתָא corrupted into יסודא ר״. [16] See note 13 above.

was corrupted into ענגין. Or νεμόμενα may in the sense of 'pasturing' be a rendering of רעין, which being a corruption of רעעין (so Beer) was itself corrupted into ענגין = νεφέλας. Bouriant followed by Flemming takes νεφέλας to be a corruption of Ναφηλείμ. But νεμόμενα is against this. [4] A gloss. Gˢ E omit. [5] E = τρόμους. [6] So also Gˢ: E omits. It may be a doublet of μηδὲν ἐσθίοντα. If it belongs to the original text it may be a mis-rendering of רעב = 'to hunger,' and should be replaced by πεινῶντα, or better λιμώττοντα. ἀσιτεῖν in the sense of an involuntary fast would be unusual. Beer quotes Wellhausen, *Reste Arab. Heidenthums*², 149 sq., to the effect that the Jinns suffer from a devouring hunger and yet cannot eat. [7] E corrupt = ἀόρατα. See p. 44, note 22. [8] MS. wrongly trans. before καὶ ἐξαναστήσει. [9] E = εἰς τὰς γυναῖκας. [10] Add τῶν γιγάντων with Gˢ E. It is required by ἀφ' ὧν. [11] ἀφ' ὧν must be taken with ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν. It is the Semitic idiom מנפש דִּי בסרהון = 'from the souls of whose flesh.' [12] Add with Gᵍ E πνεύματα πονηρὰ κληθήσεται. See note 1. [13] See note 6 above. [14] These words though not found in Gᵍ or E may be genuine as Lods recognized. [15] See note 9 above. [16] A gloss from Gen. vi. 4? ναφηλείμ is a transliteration of נפלים, and thus a doublet of γιγάντων going before: see Gen. vi. 4. οἱ ἰσχυροὶ τῆς γῆς is an expanded rendering of הגברים and οἱ μεγ. ὀνομαστοί of אנשי השם in the same verse.

[1] E wrongly omits. [2] Add with Gˢ ἐφ' ἅπαξ ὁμοῦ τελεσθήσεται. E = ὅλως τελεσθήσεται. [3] E adds πρότερον. [4] Interpolated (?). E omits. [5] E = ἐξουθενημένον. [6] E adds ὑμῖν. [7] E = γνοφώδη taking γνόφος in the sense of 'whirlwind' or 'tempest,' as in Job xxvii. 20 (LXX). [8] E = ἡ κορυφὴ τῆς κεφαλῆς. [9] E seems corrupt, but may point back to ἄκρα βάθη. [10] E adds καὶ μάχαιραν πυρός. [11] E = παραδεχόμενον. I don't understand παρέχον in this clause. [12] E = καὶ ἴδον. [13] E omits through hmt. [14] E = τὰ ὄρη τῶν γνόφων—a phrase that is derived from Jer. xiii. 16 הרי נשף where the Targ. of Jon. has טוּרי קַבֵּל. In the original then we should have had טורי קבלא. In the text before the Greek translator טורי was corrupted into רוחי. Hence τοὺς ἀνέμους τῶν γνόφων. These mountains are probably those which the Babylonian Cosmogony represents as standing at the ends of the earth in the neighbourhood of the 'springs of the great deep,' which are referred to in the next line. These mountains may again be referred to in lxxvii. 4 where the mountains of the hoar frost are mentioned. [15] E = ὑδάτων τῆς ἀβύσσου πάσης.

[1] E = καὶ ἴδον. [2] Before καί E adds καὶ ἴδον ὡς οἱ ἄνεμοι ἐξέτεινον τὸ ὕψος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ—lost through hmt. [3] Add with E καὶ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ στῦλοι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ—lost through hmt. (cf. Job xxvi. 11). [4] We should probably emend into τὸν οὐρανόν with E. [5] E = δύνοντας in an active sense, and this is probably the right reading here. διανεύοντας has been emended into δινεύοντας (Dillmann) 'whirling,' but so far as there is any sense in this it is already conveyed by στρέφοντας. Swete proposes διανύοντας; but this would require τρόχον, whereas the context requires τροχόν (cf. lxxiii. 2). According to lxxii. 5 the wind blows along the chariot of the sun. Does this imply in our text διαπνέοντας, but this word could not rightly be used in this sense. [6] So also best MSS. of E. Later MSS. = τὰς νεφέλας. [7] Add with E τὰς ὁδοὺς τῶν ἀγγέλων ἴδον—lost through hmt. [8] Added with E. Lost before πέρατα. Radermacher and Diels add περὶ τά. [9] E adds πρὸς νότον. [10] MS. τρις. [11] MS. βαλλοντας. [12] Add τὸ μέν (Radermacher). [13] E = ΙΑCΕϢC. Corrupt (?) for ΙΑCΠΙΔΟC (ישפה) = 'of jasper.' But since ταθεν is the reading of Gᵍ, the Ethiopic translator most probably found merely a corrupt form which suggested some derivative of ἰᾶσθαι as ἰατικοῦ. This word taken in conjunction with ταθεν might point to ὑακίνθου as the original word, or ἰανθίνου. Diels suggests the latter. [14] MS. το. [15] An Aramaic form of פוך. [16] E = πέραν.

[1] This verse is defective. Its complement is found at the close of the chapter: G¹ ἀρχαγγέλων ὀνόματα ἑπτά which should, however, be read as in Gg² ὀνόματα ζ′ ἀρχαγγέλων. Taken together these point to ὀνόματα τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀρχαγγέλων τῶν δυνάμεων. E = καὶ ταῦτά ἐστιν ὀνόματα τῶν ἐγρηγόρων τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων. [2] If the original were Hebrew we might with Lods take κόσμος here to be a rendering of עֲבָא as in LXX, Gen. ii. 1; Deut. iv. 19, xvii. 3; Isa. xxiv. 21. [3] E corrupt = τρόμου. [4] = רעואל. [5] MS. εκδεικων I have emended in accordance with E. See, however, note on xxiii. 4 below. [6] E = καὶ τοὺς φωστῆρας, but G is right. [7] E wrongly omits. [8] Though E = λαῷ, the above is right. Uriel presides over Chaos: see xxi. 1, 2 (xviii. 12). The καί which Gg preserves before ἐπὶ τῷ λαῷ supports this view. [9] E gives acc. of limitation. [10] See Gg² for ver. 8 omitted here and in E. [11] On these words see note 1 above. [12] This phrase goes badly with τεθέαμαι. Is it a gloss due to ver. 4? [13] MS. τον. [14] MS. εκεκων. [15] MS. ο εις τον. [16] See note 8 above. [17] This verse is genuine although lost by Gg¹ and E. This is shown by the ἑπτά in both Gg¹ and Gg².

[1] E wrongly trans. before καὶ εἶπέν μοι and changes into 3rd sing. See note 46, p. 55. [2] E = τῆς ὀδύνης. See note 5, p. 56, and note 41, p. 54. [3] E = καὶ ὧδε. [4] This phrase forms a doublet with εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. Here ενος is a corruption of αἰῶνος. We find the same corruption in the LXX. of Ezek. xxv. 15 ἕως ἑνός. Radermacher emends μέχρι αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων. [5] E adds καί. [6] Here in genitive. But if we follow E we must read στερεάς in acc. MS. εισστερεας. [7] E adds καὶ πλάτος. [8] E omits. For σκοτεινοί MS. gives εισκοτινοι. [9] E adds τῶν νίῶν. [10] The impossible εποιησαν is accurately reproduced by E. The οὗτοι οἱ τόποι (also in nominative in E) may of course be a nominativus pendens. [11] E adds αὐτῶν. [12] Text corrupt: also that of E which = τὰ πνεύματα ἀνθρώπων νεκρῶν καὶ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτῶν. As Lods has pointed out, vers. 5 b and 6 of G show that only a single spirit is referred to. Moreover G has lost πνεῦμα which is preserved by E. Hence read πνεῦμα ἀνθρώπου νεκροῦ ἐντυγχάνοντος καὶ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ. [13] E = τότε.

[32] n omits next three words. [33] q, $t^2\beta$. a–q omit. [34] b c omit. q reads ኦሜጊ: [35] q omits. [36] These two words seem intrusions in E. They are wanting in G. For ዘየዓቢ: of g, all other MSS. read ዓቢይ: q omits next four words. [37] = ἕως. If the two preceding words are alien to the text, then ἕως was corrupt for ἐν ᾧ. [38] g t. m u, β read ዓቢይ: [39] m q t^1 u. g, $t^2\beta$ prefix ወ. [1] MS. ηρωτησεν. [2] Em. with E from διο. Thus in οὗ . . . ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ we have the Semitic idiom קָלָהּ . . . דִּי. See also ver. 9; xvii. 1; xxxii. 3. [3] E adds περὶ αὐτοῦ καί but wrongly, apparently. [4] Em. from κυκλωματων. The translator of E found κυκλώματα in ver. 2 for a corruption of κοιλώματα preserved in G, and here κριμάτων another corruption of κοιλωμάτων. [5] Em. by Dillmann and Lods from ην απο του αιωνος. [6] Corrupt. We expect τέσσαρες. [7] Semitic idiom = אשר . . . בו or בָּהּ . . . דִּי. [8] Em. with E from των αμαρτωλῶ. [9] E takes this transitively: but it is to be taken passively as in Wisd. xii. 11; 2 Kings ix. 34; Matt. xxv. 31. [10] E = μέχρι αἰῶνος καί. [11] So Radermacher emends from ην ανταποδωσεις. E = καὶ τῆς ἀνταποδόσεως. [12] E = ἦσαν. [13] Add ὅλοι with E. [14] An explanatory gloss.

[1] E = ἀναιρεθήσονται or ἀποθανοῦνται. This is supported by xcix. 11; cviii. 3; Matt. x. 28. [2] E = κύριός μου, ὁ κύριος τῆς δικαιοσύνης. [3] = 'the world.' E = μέχρι τοῦ αἰῶνος. [4] E adds μέχρι. [5] E adds φλεγόμενον. [6] Read ἀλλά with E. [7] = רעע הוה. Is the רעע corrupt for רָעָה = 'feeds,' 'nourishes?' In that case we should have a play on the name of the angel. See xx. 4. [8] Before καί insert with E κἀκεῖθεν ἐφώδευσα εἰς ἄλλον τόπον τῆς γῆς. [9] E adds ἡμέρας καί. [10] E = καὶ τοὺς λίθους ἐντίμους καὶ καλούς or by a slight change the nom. can be read: see notes 35, 36, p. 60. [11] E = σκολιαί. [12] An intrusion. [13] E (i.e. h o ḅ) = ὑπερεῖχεν (a, β-h o ḅ = καὶ τὸ ὕψος) αὐτῶν ἦσαν ὅμοια πάντα, but πάντα is an intrusion, and by slight changes we obtain a text = ὑπερεῖχεν αὐτῶν ὅμοιον. See note 47, p. 61. [14] MS. αυτω. [15] E = εὐώδη which is right. Cf. vers. 4, 5, xxv. 4. [16] Em. from ηυφρανθη (Beer). Here αὐτῶν is the object of the verb. But as the verb was wanting in the original of E, E rendered αὐτῶν as though it were ἐξ αὐτῶν, thus making it dependent on the subject. For οὐδεὶς ... αὐτῷ E gives οὐδὲν (or οὐδεὶς) αὐτῶν καὶ οὐδὲν ἕτερον ὅμοιον αὐτῷ ἦν.

[1] MS. φθεινι. [2] E = ὁ δὲ καρπὸς καλὸς καὶ ὁ καρπός. [3] E = εὐειδές but text is better. See note 15, p. 61. [4] E adds καὶ ἐντίμων. [5] E adds με. [6] This interesting phrase = תצבא יציבא. Cf. Dan. vii. 19. E = ἀκριβοῖς μαθεῖν. Here the μαθεῖν is unnecessary. Cf. Dan. vii. 19 (Theod.) where after ἐπήτουν ἀκριβῶς some MSS. add μαθεῖν. The phrase has already occurred in xxi. 5 περὶ τίνος τὴν ἀλήθειαν φιλοσπουδεῖς. There E renders freely as περὶ τίνος ἀκριβοῖς καὶ φιλοσπουδεῖς. See also Dan. vii. 16. [7] MS. απεκρειθη. [8] E adds λέγων. [9] E adds ὃ εἶδες. [10] E adds αὐτοῦ. [11] Text confused. E = ὁ ἅγιος καὶ ὁ μέγας ὁ κύριος τῆς δόξης. ὁ κύριος τῆς δόξης is supported by xxvii. 5. [12] E = αἰώνιος. [13] MS. ει. [14] E = τόδε. [15] This text seems right save the phrase εἰς ζωήν = לחיין or possibly לחייא corrupt for לֶהֱוֵא = ἔσται. The writer had before him Ezek. xlvii. 12 והיו פריו למאכל. Thus the original probably ran וְאִנְּבֵה לבחיריא להוא למיכל. Hence for εἰς ζωήν in text read ἔσται. E which = ἐκ τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ δοθήσεται τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς ζωή, καὶ εἰς βορρᾶν should be corrected accordingly. Mr. Cowley suggests εἰς βοράν may be a rendering of לחמא and of this לחייא may be a corrupt dittography. If this is right, then the full stop should be omitted after δοθήσεται and τότε . . . βοράν treated as one sentence.

q ወይትወሀብ፡ The verb in the Aramaic was לֶהֱוֵא = ἔσται of a corruption of which εἰς ζωήν is a rendering. See note 15, p. 63. [50] m reads ለዓራያት፡ q ለኔራን፡ [51] g q (= εἰς ζωήν?). All other MSS. read ሕይወት፡ = ζωή. a x trans. ሕይ″ after መስዕ፡ In either case the text is wrong. See note 49 and also note 15, p. 63. [52] g q. Other MSS. read መን″ መስዕ፡ Here E confounded εἰς βοράν = ለእክል፡ with εἰς βορρᾶν = መን″ መስዕ፡ The ወ before መንገለ፡ should be placed before ይተክል፡ [53] We should prefix ወ. See preceding note. u adds መንገለ፡ መስዕ፡ b o (v) ,a ,b read ይተክል፡ [54] a. β reads ውስተ፡

[1] E = κυρίου. [2] MS. βασιλευς. [3] E = αἰωνίου. [4] E trans. after ἅγιον, and perhaps rightly. [5] E = εἰς τὸ ἅγιον καὶ (g q, o b. m t u, β–o b omit) λήψονται τὴν ὀσμὴν αὐτοῦ, but, as we have shown (note 5, p. 64), it can by an easy emendation be brought into line with G. Otherwise the two versions may go back to the Aramaic. Thus G = ולקודשא יעולן רֵיחֵהי and E לקודשא (ו)יעילן רֵיחַהּ. The next words are somewhat in favour of the text of E. ἐν τοῖς ὀστέοις αὐτῶν = בגרמיהון which also = εἰς ἑαυτούς. This latter meaning suits the context. [6] This seems to require us to read ἤ before ἣν. [7] MS. ηυλογησαν. [8] E = αἰώνιον. [9] This order is preserved in E. See note 19, p. 64. [10] This sentence is difficult. τοῦ δένδρου ἐκκοπέντος can only be interpreted of Israel. Hence if they are genuine, δένδρα ἔχοντα cannot be. So the translator of E may have thought and so omitted rendering δένδρα ἔχοντα. If τοῦ δένδρου ἐκκοπέντος is original, the text may refer to the participation of the righteous descendants of Israel in the Messianic kingdom in Palestine. Since, however, the trees here spoken of as having shoots are again referred to in xxvii. 1 γῆ . . . πλήρης δένδρων, we conclude that the δένδρα are original, and that τοῦ δένδρου ἐκκοπέντος is a disturbing gloss, which introduces symbolical meanings into a non-metaphorical passage. Hence I have bracketed it. μενούσας which seems to be a rendering of קַיְמִין, and so may be rendered here 'living.' [11] E adds καί. [12] Corrupt. E = ῥύσιν which is right. [13] Better αὐτῶν with E.

[1] Instead of this phrase E reads ὑποκάτω. [2] MS. ποσε φαρανγες. [3] E adds καὶ οὐκ ἔχουσαι πλάτος. [4] Add with E περὶ τῶν πετρῶν καὶ ἐθαύμασα—lost through hmt. [5] E = τότε. [6] Add with E τότε ἀπεκρίθη Οὐριήλ, ὁ εἷς τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων, ὃς μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ ἦν καὶ εἶπεν. [7] A transliteration of גֵּיא. The translator of E understood it rightly as = φάραγξ. It is similarly transliterated in Neh. xi. 35; Ezek. xxxii. 5; as γέ in 2 Chron. xxviii. 3; Ezek. xxxix. 15; as γαί in Jos. xviii. 16; Ezek. xxxix. 11. Before γῆ add with E αὕτη ἡ. [8] MS. τινες. [9] E = κριτήριον αὐτῶν. E may be corrupt. See note 39, p. 66. [10] E = ἔσται ἡ ὅρασις. Thus E makes the sentence begin with this verse, whereas G makes the first half of this verse part of the sentence which immediately precedes. [11] MS. ασεβεις. [12] E = αἰώνιος. [13] E adds πρὸς ἀνατολάς. [14] E adds τοῦ ὄρους, which G wrongly omits. See note 3, p. 68. [15] A faulty transliteration of מִדְבָּרָא, more faulty as βαβδηρά in xxix. 1. Though מדברא is Aramaic it does not prove that the original was Aramaic; for መድበራ (= madbarā), which is an Ethiopic transliteration of the same Hebrew word מִדְבָּר in Jos. v. 6, implies an Aramaic form. For other forms see Jos. v. 6; xviii. 12 μαδβαρῖτις or μαβδαρῖτις. The Greek translators were often Aramaic-speaking Jews, and introduced Aramaisms probably unconsciously.

This is the mountain referred to in E and G (xxix. 1) and in the preceding verse in E. Or G may be a rendering of ומזרעין corrupt (?) for וזרעונין (cf. Dan. i. 12, 16; Mishna, Kil. ii. 2; iii. 2), which would have been better rendered by καὶ φυτευμάτων. If we assume the original to have been in Hebrew, and adopt the order in E, then E = מזרעים which might possibly be a corruption of רעננים = 'green.' This redundant use of ὡς without anything corresponding to it in the Semitic is found also in 2 Chron. iv. 10 ὡς πρὸς ἀνατολὰς κατέναντι = קֵדְמָה מִפּוּל נֶגְבָּה. [14] a adds ጽባሕ: [15] m prefixes ወ. [16] Interpolated in E owing to interpolation of ዘይሰርብ: above. [17] a x read እምህየኒ: q እምክልሂ: [18] Em. with G (ἀνάγει) from g u የዐርግ: m t የዓርግ: q ይዐርግ: a x read ዕፀው: [19] Em. from ማይ: ወጠል: with G. t adds in brackets ዘዘሊአሁ: Before ማይ: E interpolates ወእምህየኒ: (see note 20). I have obelized ማየ: as corrupt, but the corruption already existed in the Aramaic since we have ὕδωρ in G. In no case can it be said that water 'ascends.' Again ጠለ: i.e. δρόσον shows that we require some such word as 'mist' or 'vapour.' The exact phrase we need is found in Ps. cxxxv. 7; Jer. x. 13; li. 16, i.e. מַעֲלֶה נְשִׂאִים which the LXX renders ἀνάγειν νεφέλας in each instance, and the Targums by מסיק ענגין in all three.

[1] E = ἀπὸ τῶν σπερμάτων καί. See note 6, p. 68. G and E only differ in respect to the position of καί. Neither text is intelligible. The corruption must lie in σπερμάτων. [2] E adds ἐν αὐτῷ. [3] Em. with E from ανομβρον which gives no good sense. [4] E = φαινόμενον, but G is right. MS. φαιρομενον. [5] E adds ὃς ὑδραγωγεῖ. [6] See note 13, p. 68. [7] North-west. A Semitic idiom. Cf. Hebrew צפונה מערבה or צפונית מערבית in this sense. [8] E = ἀνάγεται ὕδωρ καὶ δρόσος, but by a slight change in vocalization becomes = G. See notes 18, 19, p. 68. [9] E = καὶ ἐκεῖθεν which it has trans. into previous verse. See note 20, p. 69. [10] E = ἀπὸ τοῦ. [11] See note 14, p. 67. [12] E corrupt. [13] E adds ἐκεῖ. [14] = דרינא which (as Beer following Praetorius points out in Apok. v. Pseud. ii. 256) is corrupt for דריחא. Hence we should have εὐώδη instead of κρίσεως. [15] E corrupt. See note 28, p. 69. [16] = לְבֹנָה. [17] = מֹר. MS. Ζμυρνα. [18] E omits, unless we suppose kuaskuas which occurs without any sense in the preceding line to be a corrupt transliteration of καρύαις or καρυίσκοις = שָׁקֵד. See note 29, p. 69. MS. Καροιης.

I therefore conjecture that in מיין (= ὕδωρ) we have a primitive corruption of ענין. [20] E wrongly trans. this word before መየ: and replaced it by ወ. I have restored it to its right place with G. [21] β–o. g reads መብድራ: m ምብዳራ: q t መብደራ: u መብዳራ: o መደበራ: [22] Em. with G from H of g. All other MSS. omit. [23] g q, h o (v). Other MSS. read ጽባሑ: [24] a–m q u. m q read ለደብረ ዝ. u ለደበር: and adds በዝንቱ: after ቀረብኩ: t[2], β–h o read ለውእቱ: ደበር: h o[1] b ወውስተ: (h ውእቱ:) ደ″. [25] u prefixes ወ. [26] m adds ኒ. q reads ወ. [27] = κρίσεως. See note 14, p. 69. [28] = πλέον corrupt for πνέοντα. Perhaps ፈ.ደ″ here was originally ይፈደፍዱ: = πλέονα (ὄντα). We should read ይነፍሑ: [29] g t. m reads ቍስቍስ: q ቈስቈስ: u ቍስቈስ: β ቈስቈስ: This word is an intrusion if G is right. In any case it is unintelligible. As it may also be ኰስኰስ: it is possibly a corruption of ከርካዕ: = καρύαις or καρύοις = שָׁקֵד or לוּז, both of which may mean the almond-tree or the almond-nut. Since this word is found at the close of the verse in G I have supplied it in E in acc. after ይትመሰሉ: [30] t prefixes ወ. [31] a–q, h o[1] b. q reads ስኒዝ: t[2], d e f k l n y[2] a ዘስሒን: a b c (w) x ለስ″. [32] a, d k l n y[2] a. a b e x ወዕፀወኒ: c ″ውኒ: f o[1] b ዕፀውሂ: h ዕፀወሂ: Flemming thinks that in E and G there is the loss of a word signifying fruit; but I am not aware of any balsam-tree which yields nuts.

[1] See note 51, p. 48. [2] E has 𐎀𐎁𐎓: (= ὄρη) which may be corrupt for 𐎒𐎓𐎁𐎍: = ᾠχόμην. [3] E adds οὐ. [4] E adds ἀενάου. [5] E = καὶ ἴδον δένδρον καλόν. [6] E = ὅμοιον. χρόα may be corrupt for χλόᾳ (Radermacher). [7] See note 21, p. 70. [8] E adds ὡς. [9] = צָרִי. [10] = הֶלְבְּנָה. [11] E = ἐκείνων. [12] This clause defines the habitat of the tree. E omits this, but gives the name καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ δένδρα ἀλόης. [13] Indeclinable as in xxviii. 2. [14] Em. from εξαυτης. E corrupt = στερεός. στακτή = לט Gen. xxxvii. 25; xliii. 11. It also translates אהלות, מֹר, נטף נפך in the LXX. See note 37, p. 71. [15] E = λάβωσιν, and adds ἐκεῖνον τὸν καρπόν, and connects this clause with what follows. That for τρίβωσιν we should read καύσωσιν, see note 40, p. 71. [16] E omits. [17] E = καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα τὰ ἀρώματα εἰς βορρᾶν ὁρῶν ὑπὲρ τὰ ὄρη the first five words of which were lost through hmt.

Asia which yields a fragrant odour when burnt' (Encyc. Bib. i. 120–121). In Hebrew its form is אהלים (Num. xxiv. 6; Prov. vii. 17) or אהלות (Ps. xlv. 8; Cant. iv. 14—in the last passage א of the LXX and Aquila render it by ἀλόη). In Aramaic the form is אֲהָלָא. For 𐎒𐎍·𐎔𐎕𐎖: . . . 𐎇𐎈𐎀𐎓: q reads 𐎒𐎊𐎋𐎖: 𐎀𐎘𐎒: 𐎇𐎋𐎀𐎓: For 𐎀𐎘𐎒: of a, fh I have read 𐎀𐎘𐎒·: with β–fh. [36] Read 𐎒𐎖·𐎕: with G καὶ πάντα. d omits together with next word. [37] After 𐎌𐎍𐎕″ a word is wanting, but its corrupt equivalent is found in 𐎔·𐎖·𐎀: three words later. G has εξαυτης. Since 𐎔·𐎖·𐎀 = στερεός it is possible that both εξαυτης and στερεός are corruptions of στακτῆς; for στακτή is used as a rendering of the perfume אהלות—which designates also the trees mentioned in the text. Otherwise the corruption might originate in the Aramaic. Thus ἐξ αὐτῆς = מְנָה corrupt for מורא. [38] I take these to mean almond-trees, not almonds. [39] See note 38. [40] = λάβωσιν αὐτόν. But 𐎉·𐎖𐎍𐎀𐎓: may be corrupt for 𐎕·𐎖𐎍𐎉𐎓 = τρίβωσιν. If my identification of this tree in note 35, p. 70, is right, we might expect καύσωσιν here, as eagle-wood exhales fragrant odours when burnt. Now τρίβωσιν = ידקקון (Pael) corrupt for ידלקון = καύσωσιν. Hence we should read 𐎌𐎖·𐎀𐎉𐎓: in our text. [41] An Ethiopic gloss? [42] = βέλτιον ἔσται.

[1] E = δένδρα εὐώδη a free rendering. [2] E = ὑπέρ. [3] E = μακρὰν ἀπὸ τούτου καί. [4] E adds τοῦ ἀγγέλου. [5] MS. ελθων. [6] E takes μακρόθεν as governing the following words in the genitive. [7] E = φυόμενα. If δύω μέν is right, then τὸ δένδρον τῆς ζωῆς should be inserted before καὶ τὸ δένδρον τῆς φρονήσεως. But the evidence of xxiv–xxv is decidedly against this; for according to xxiv. 2–xxv the tree of life is in the neighbourhood of the chief of the seven great mountains. Now these mountains are in the NW. but the earthly Paradise is in the NE. xxxii. 1; lxxvii. 3. The passages from the Zohar quoted by Laurence and subsequently adduced by Lods and Lawlor in support of δύω μέν as the true reading do not necessarily support their contention. These are according to Laurence, p. xxix (vol. i. Parasha בראשית, p. 37^b, ed. Mant. et Amstel): 'Sanctus et Benedictus sus-

tulit eum (Enochum) ex mundo, ut ipsi serviret... Ex eo inde tempore liber tradebatur, qui Enochi dictus est. In hora qua Deus eum sustulit, ostendebat ei omnia repositoria suprema, ostendebat ei arborem vitae medio in horto, folia ejus atque ramos.' Again (vol. ii. Parasha בשלח, p. 55[a]): 'In Enochi libro narratur, Sanctum et Benedictum, cum ascendere eum jusserit et omnia ei superiorum et inferiorum regnorum repositoria ostenderit monstrasse quoque arborem vitae et arborem de qua Adamus praeceptum recepit.' But these passages refer not to the Ethiopic but to the Slavonic Enoch. In the first passage the italicized words omnia repositoria suprema refer to Paradise and hell which are described in viii, ix–x of the Slavonic Enoch. Moreover the next italicized words, arborem vitae medio in horto, are an actual quotation from viii. 3 of the same book. This tree is in Paradise according to Slav. En. viii. 3 but in the neighbourhood of the chief of the seven great mountains according to the Eth. En. xxiv. 3–xxv. In the second passage the reference of superiorum et inferiorum regnorum repositoria to Slav. En. viii–x is still clearer than in the first: similarly the words arborem vitae are derived from the same source. On the other hand what are we to make of the phrase arborem de qua Adamus praeceptum recepit? It may refer to Eth. En. xxxvi. 3–6 since there is no mention of this tree in the Slav. Enoch. But the conjunction of these two trees in the Zohar does not necessarily imply that they were represented as together in the Paradise of Adam. If the words arborem de qua Adamus praeceptum recepit refer at all to the Eth. En. they are sufficiently explained by xxxii. 3–6. We have already shown that the phrase arborem vitae medio in horto is from Slav. En. viii. 3.

[8] E adds εὐώδη. [9] Can the Greek before the translator of E have been εὐειδή? If so, it is a corruption of the εὐώδη found in E after ἐκεῖ. [10] =the Aramaic idiom הִי ׳ ׳ ׳ פֵּירֵהּ. See also xviii. 1; xxii. 5, 8. [11] This clause is lost in E through hmt., though the order such a loss presumes must have been different such as: ὅμοιον ⌜τὸ δένδρον ἐκεῖνο ... ὅμοια⌝ κερατίᾳ. [12] MS. κερατι. [13] E = καί.

and ያነሥእሙ: does not. Cf. Ecclus. x. 14 θρόνους ἀρχόντων καθεῖλεν ὁ κύριος: Wisd. v. 23 περιτρέψει θρόνους δυναστῶν. Now we can with some certainty determine the Hebrew lying behind ይገፈ″; for in the next verse (xlvi. 6[a]) we find this verb recurs in the phrase ገጸ: ይገፈትእ: which = יַפִּיל פָּנִים (see xlviii. 8 for the passive construction). Thus ይገፈትኦሙ: ለነገሥት: እመናብርቲሆሙ: ወእመንግሥቲሆሙ: = ויפיל את־המלכים מכסאותיהם וממלכותיהם. This verse was probably written in the margin as a more correct form of xlvi. 4[a]. ያነሥእሙ: then in our text = ἐξαρεῖ or ἀνοίσει = יטול corrupt for יפיל. Hence for ያነ″ read ይገፈትእሙ: The above conclusions postulate the existence not only of a Hebrew text, but also of a MS. with marginal alternative readings. [1] u omits. ፈትሑ: ልጓ″ is a strange phrase. The text of this stanza gives no good sense and is very corrupt. If we read 7[a] and 7[b] together it is clear beyond doubt that the writer was making use of Dan. viii. 10 'And some of the ... stars it cast down to the ground and trod upon them.' The corruption originated at all events in part from the intrusion of 7^b between 7^a and 7^c. If 7^b is genuine it came immediately after እሙንቱ: ኮኑ: እሉ: Turning now to 7^c we see that it is senseless as it stands. ወይክይዱ: ዲበ: የብስ: = καὶ καταπατοῦσιν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν. We have only to supply an acc. to the verb here, i. e. read ይክይድዎሙ: = καταπατοῦσιν αὐτούς in order to bring the text into line with Dan. viii. 10, save that the latter connects the ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν with the preceding clause. It is now obvious that ወየኀድጉ: ውስቴቶ: is a senseless addition. Moreover this phrase which has here a bad ethical sense has always good ethical associations throughout the genuine sections of the Similitudes. Cf. xxxvii. 2; xl. 6, 7; xlviii. 5. In the interpolations, however, it carries with it doubtful or bad associations: cf. liv. 9; lv. 1; lx. 5; lxv. 6, &c. Returning now to 7^a, the verb in this clause = ידינו which seems corrupt for יפילו = καταβάλλουσι. For ይኬንኑ: we should then read ያወርዱ: The stanza should then be read as follows:—

ወእሙንቱ: እሉ: ⌜ያሌዕሉ: እደዊሆሙ: ውስተ: ልዑል:

[1] I have bracketed this word as an explanatory marginal gloss adopted into the text. n omits. g adds after አስረት፡ (Cf. d ማእሥራት፡ ማዕበላት፡). All other MSS., however, attempt in one way or other to give it a regular syntactical connexion with the text. Thus u makes it the subject of the verb and changes አስረት፡ the original subject of the verb into a participle qualifying it (see p. 97, note 44). q t insert a copula between the two nouns. m, β–d make the added word a genitive dependent on the original word. For መባልዕት፡ m reads መባዓልት፡ q ወመባልዕት፡ t ወመባዕላት፡ u መብዕለት፡ β–d መባዕላት፡ d ማዕበላት፡ [2] q reads ዘመኑ፡ [3] e reads ያስትዳልዉ፡ [4] g u, β–n. m q t, n read ይዴለው፡ [5] g. q m u, $t^2\beta$ አዛዝኤል፡ t^1 አዛዜአል፡ [6] c omits. [10] q reads አእባን፡ [11] g. α–g, β ጠዋያት፡ [12] g q. m t u, β ይክድኑ፡ [13] *α–*t^1, $t^2\beta–a,a$. t^1 reads ዴቤሆሙ፡ a መላእክቲሆሙ፡ ,a መልዕልቲ″. [14] c reads አዘዘ፡ [15] g m. q t u, β read መናፍስት፡ [16] $t^2\beta–f$ omit. [17] m t u trans. after ወሩፋኤል፡ against g q, β. t^2 omits ወ before ገብርኤል፡ [18] $t^2\beta$ omit. [19] α–q, f h k l n o x y ,a ,b. q omits. a b c d e read በ. [34] ,b omits. A marginal gloss subsequently incorporated in the text. There were according to early Semitic views only the waters above the heavens and the waters below the earth: such also was the view of our writer as appears from the next verse. The text in brackets follows g m, $t^2\beta$ save that for አንቅዕት፡ in g I have read አንቅዕት፡ with m. q supports text save that it reads ሰማይ፡ and t^1 save that it reads ማያት፡ for ሰማያት፡ After እለ፡ u adds መልዕልተ፡ ሰማያት፡ ወ. [35] g m save that g reads አንቅዕት፡ instead of አንቅዕት፡ q u read አንቅዕት፡ እለ፡. t reads only እለ፡ and β ዘ.

4 Ezra vi. 49. Et tunc conservasti (= נצרת corrupt for ירת: hence read creasti) duo animalia, nomen uni vocasti Behemoth et nomen secundi vocasti Leviathan (Enoch lx. 7, 8). 50. Et separasti ea ab alterutro (Enoch lx. 9) non enim poterat septima pars ubi erat aqua congregata capere ea. 51. Et dedisti Behemoth unam partem quae siccata (Enoch lx. 7, 9) est tertio die, ut inhabitet (lx. 8) in ea ubi sunt montes mille: 52. Leviathan autem dedisti septimam partem humidam (Enoch lx. 8, 9): et servasti ea ut fiant in devorationem (Enoch lx. 24) quibus vis et quando vis. Apocalypse of Baruch xxix. 4 'And Behemoth will be revealed from his place, and Leviathan will ascend from the sea, those two great monsters (Enoch lx. 7, 8) which I created on the fifth day of creation and I kept them until that time; and then they will be for food for all that are left' (Enoch lx. 24).

[1] m. The usual form with this meaning is ተከ" but see end of this note and p. 106, note 13. This MS. alone is right. The separation of the two monsters here referred to is not to take place on the day of judgement, as a–m, β represent, but is already an event in the past as ver. 9 implies. Hence the entire difference each month amounts to $\frac{2}{18}$ths or $\frac{1}{9}$th of a day. Flemming transposes the phrase before ዕለት: making it dependent on ካዕበት: and renders it 'um das Doppelte eines Neuntels'; but this rendering is impossible grammatically, and if it were right in grammar, it would be wrong in sense. [1] m q, β. g t u read በሰማይ: Text may be corrupt. The Greek translator read הַשָּׁמַיִם for הַשָּׁמֶשׁ and עֶרֶב 'hunger' for עֶרֶב 'evening' (Hallévi). [2] See note 1. [3] a–q. q, t[2] β read በ. [4] Bracketed as an early interpolation in the Hebrew text. When these clauses are removed, verses 4 and 5 form a tristich relating to the moon. It will be observed that before and after—verses 3, 6 and 7—are tristichs. [5] q omits. [6] g q, o ḅ. Other MSS. ከዋክብት: [7] q[cor]. Other MSS. ትእዛዝ: Beer conjectured this text. The dittographic text appearing first as ወኢ፟ወኢ፟ was next expanded into ወኢ፟ወኢአሐቲ: as in g, β–h i, in order to bring the dittography into grammatical agreement with ጥበብ: or into ወኢአሐዱ: ወኢአሐቲ: of q m t, h i. But the dittography cannot be connected with ጥበብ: for 'wisdom' is here personified as the subsequent clauses show. To return now to the word እመንበርታ: which I have emended into እምነባራተ: we should observe that it does not admit of any reasonable rendering in this passage. The word means 'state,' 'condition,' 'life,' or 'food.' Even if we forced upon it the meaning of lebensgrund, as Flemming has done, the sense is not suitable to the passage. The black bulls (i. e. the Cainites) did not leave their pastures and cows simply to engage in lamentation. In fact የዐ″ is simply an emendation of የሐይዉ: Nor yet can የሐይዉ: be original. The difficulty does not lie in its being in the indicative ; for this construction occurs occasionally—see Dillmann's Lexicon, 767, but in the construction የሐይዉ: ፮ለካልኡ: which is practically impossible. [1] Corrupt for κύνεσσιν. [2] Eth.=αὐτοὺς πάντας. [3] Eth.=τὸ πρόβατον ἠνοίγησαν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ εἶδεν or τὸ πρόβατον ἠνοίγη τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ καὶ εἶδεν, but the construction in the latter case seems unexampled. See note 17. Hence the Greek is to be followed here, but emended into τὸ πρόβατον οὗ ... ἐθεάσατο; for this verse should refer to Samuel as the phrase τὸν ἄρνα τοῦτον in ver. 45 proves. [4] Eth.=δόξαν, and this seems to be the true text. See next note. [5] Eth.=ἀδοξίᾳ and apparently rightly. [6] Eth.=πρόβατον. [7] An addition of the scribe of the fragment. [8] Eth. adds καὶ ἀνεπήδησε ὁ κριὸς (ἐκεῖνος) ὁ δεύτερος. [9] Eth. = καὶ ἐθεώρουν ἕως οὗ κατέβαλον οἱ κύνες τὸν κριὸν τὸν πρῶτον.

[1] a e f h k n v w trans. [2] m. Possibly we should read ያሰርጓዎሙ፡ For g, i l[2] n point to the imperfect. All other MSS. are corrupt. The corrupt readings arose probably through the wrong insertion of ኧ before ያሰርጓዎሙ፡ or else through the corruption of ኧ in አስርጓዎሙ፡ into ኧ. Thus we have a change of verb in g ኢይጸርጓዎሙ፡ and o ȷ ኢጸርጓዎሙ፡ and yet another change of verb in t ኢሰምዕዎሙ፡ or a dropping of the corrupt negative in q ጸርጓዎሙ፡ u omits with preceding ወ. In β the corruption has advanced further and introduced አባግዕ፡ save in the case of o ȷ which we have already noticed. Thus β–i n o read አባግዕ፡ (አባግዕሰ፡ a) ኢጸርጓዎሙ፡ i l[2] n ȷ a አባግዕ፡ ኢ(l[2] n omit) ይጸርጓዎሙ፡ [3] a–g. g, n read ወኢያጸምኡ፡ ነገ″. a b c d f h i k l o x ȷ ወኢያፅምኡ፡ ዘነገርዎሙ፡ e y ወኢያፅምእዎሙ፡ ዘነገ″. [1] u reads ይልህቅ: [2] g, β–c. m q t read እምድኅረ: u ወ. c omits. [3] m q t, β. g reads ተፈጸሙ: u omits. [4] q, n. Since g m u read ሥርዐት: ይገብር: (sic) I take it that the ይገብር: is a corruption of ይትገበር: as it is again in ver. 6 in q only. See note 11 below. The passive and intransitive verbs in this and the next verse point to ይትገበር: and the recurrence in ver. 6 of the actual phrase in our text. t, β–n emend the text wrongly into ሥርዐት: ይገብር: [5] m q read ግልስ: [6] m q t save that q reads "ድኅረዝ for "ድኅሬሁ: u, β agree with the above save that u, β omit ዓለመ: and β reads ይመጽእ: for ይወፅእ: ለ. g omits first four words through hmt. and for ለዓ" ዓ" reads ዘለዓለም: I have obelized እምድ" ይወ" ለተክለ: It = μετ' αὐτὸν γενήσεται τὸ φυτόν. This gives no intelligible sense. The corruption, I take it, lies in μετ' αὐτόν. This = אחריו which is probably corrupt for אחריתו = 'his posterity.' [7] q reads እምዝ: [8] g trans. q reads ራብዕ: ሰንበት: m omits ሰንበት: [9] m reads ወ. t ወበ. [10] m q, β. So also u but that it omits ወጻድ". g reads ራእየ: ቅዱ" ወጽድቅ: t ራዕያት: ቅዱሳት: ወጻድቃን: [11] g, h. m q u, β–h read verb in plural. t reads ኢትርእዩ: [12] q, o b read ወስርዐት: u omits. [13] e omits. [14] q reads ይገብር: See note 4 above. [15] a–u. u reads ኃምስት: ሰን". β reads ሰን" ኃምስ: [16] t[2] reads ትትሐ". [17] u omits. [18] d reads ለዓለመ: ዓለም: [19] g u, β. m q read ዛቲ: t ዝንቱ: [20] a–q, d e h i l n o. q, b c f k x ρ read ሳድስ: So also a y and trans. after ሰን". [21] n omits. [22] g m, e n. q t u, β–e n read ጽሉላን: [23] d reads ወዙሎሙ: [24] u omits. m adds ወ before ለዙሎሙ: [25] = ἀσεβήσουσιν καρδίαι πάντων ἀπὸ τῆς σοφίας = ישע לבב כלם מחכמה. Cf. Ps. xviii. 22 ἠσέβησα ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ μου = רשעתי מאלהי. That ረሸዐ: is the rendering of ἀσεβεῖν follows from x. 20 and v. 8; civ. 9. Moreover the parallel of blindness (ጽለ ዓይ:) and godlessness of heart which appears in our text recurs in xcix. 8.

APPENDIX ON VI. 7

The three lists of the fallen angels given above in E vi. 2, $G^{Syn.}$, and $G^{Giz.}$, go back to one and the same original. In E lxix. 2 the same list reappears. In the process of transmission, however, many corruptions and transpositions of the text have occurred. In the main the same order is observed in vi. 7; lxix. 2 and G^{s}. But a very different order is presented by G^{g}. As Lods (106–107) has observed the names in G were from the third onward written in four columns. These were read from left to right by E and G^{s} but from top to bottom of each column by G^{g}. Within G^{s} and G^{g} certain transpositions have occurred. These will be made clear by the following Table:—

	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)

In the above Table I have followed the order of E lxix. 2; the names as they appear in that list head each of the twenty-one columns. Next comes the list in E vi. 7; then that in G^s, and finally that in G^g. On the left of each name is placed a number which gives its place in its own list. Above each column I have put a number in brackets for convenience in references. Column (13) is placed at the end instead of after (12) since በሰሰሔየል: has no parallel in E vi. 7 and no certain one in G^s or G^g.

As regards E lxix. 2, (15) which appears again in (19) is certainly corrupt, also (21) which is a repetition of (10). To (13) we have already referred. Thus the twenty-one names are reduced to nineteen.

Of E vi. 7 (18) is wanting: also (13): (15) is hopeless. This list furnishes nineteen names.

Of G^s (7) is wanting, and (15) and (5) corrupt. This list has twenty names.

Of G^g the list is complete, but (15) is hopeless.

In the above Table the identifications may be regarded as certain in (1) (4) (6) (7–12) (14) (16) (19–20), as probable or possible in (2–3) (5) (17–18, 21), as undeterminable in (13) and (15).

PREFACE.

The present volume contains the Ethiopic texts, and translations of them into English, which are found in the manuscripts of the Lady Meux Collection, numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5. Three of these manuscripts are illustrated by series of coloured pictures which represent three distinct periods of Ethiopian art, and in the coloured plates, which are interleaved throughout the work, very careful reproductions of them, both as regards form and colour, have been given. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that the texts and their coloured illustrations are now published for the first time.

The oldest manuscript of the group contains a selection of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, with coloured illustrations, many of them being full-page. It was, in the first instance, written for a king of Ethiopia who, judging from the large size of the writing, intended to present it to some monastery or public church in his capital wherein it was to be read from on certain occasions either before the assembled monks or before a congregation of the laity. The name of the royal personage who had the manuscript written was mentioned, according to immemorial usage in Ethiopia, at the beginning and end of each Miracle, with the view of obtaining a blessing from heaven as a reward for his pious work. In the process of time, however, the king died, and the volume passed into the hands of another king, who caused the name of his predecessor to be erased throughout, and his own written in its place, so that he also might obtain a blessing. The name of the first royal owner cannot be recovered, but the name which stands in its place is David; how many owners the volume may have had between David and the king whose name he caused to be erased cannot be said. Now three kings called David reigned over Ethiopia; David I. reigned from A.D. 1382 to A.D. 1411; David II. from A.D. 1508 to A.D. 1540; and David III. from A.D. 1716 to A.D. 1721. But the only one of these three periods which agrees tolerably well with the archaeological evidence supplied by the volume is the first, and we shall probably be correct in assuming the manuscript to be a product of the end of the XIVth or beginning of the XVth century. The evidence derived from the binding is of no value in deciding this question, for it belongs to a much later period than that of the oldest leaves of the volume. It was in the reign of David I. that the wood of the Cross of Christ was brought into Ethiopia, amid great rejoicings, and to this king such a handsome manuscript of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary would have been a peculiarly pleasing possession. After David the manuscript passed into the hands of another owner called Takla Haymânôt, but whether he was of royal blood or not there is no evidence to shew. The last owner of the manuscript in Ethiopia was Theodore, the late king of Abyssinia, who by some means obtained possession of it, intending to place it in the library of the church which he had determined to build in honour of the Holy Redeemer of the World at Maḳdalâ (Magdala). It is well known that for several years before his death he caused the whole country to be carefully searched for manuscripts, and all that were found were brought to his capital, where he caused the words, "Belonging to the [Church of] the Holy Redeemer of the World", to be written in Ethiopic upon the first page of each, ተአምረ ፡ ማርያም ፡ ዘቅዱስ ፡ መድኃኔ ፡ ዓለም ።

of which were preserved by the Ethiopian Church. It is not easy to see what principle guided the scribe in making the selection of miracles in the first instance, especially as many of them are merely versions made from Arabic translations of stories of miracles written in some European language; though a large number are native compositions which record marvellous events which took place in Ethiopia. The MSS. rarely agree in the number of the Miracles which they record. Thus among British Museum MSS. Or. 651 contains 30; Orr. 520, 653, and Add. 24,188 contain 33; Or. 641 contains 40; Or. 635 contains 42; Or. 650 contains 51; Or. 648 contains 54; Or. 647 contains 59; Or. 634 contains 76; Or. 654 contains 125; Orr. 640, 644, and 655 contain 154; Or. 652 contains 160; Or. 642 contains 200; Orr. 636 and 638 contain 202; Or. 637 contains 303; and Or. 643 contains 316. The selection, however, once fixed, was perpetuated by the scribes, and the artists, having in the first case copied European illustrations, continued to reproduce them to the best of their ability, the modifications which crept into them being the result of incapacity and carelessness rather than a desire for variety.

The second MS. of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the Lady Meux Collection belongs to a much later date, and is probably not older than the third quarter of the XVIIIth century. This is tolerably certain from the fact that king Takla Haymânôt and his wife Abâla Dengel are mentioned on fol. 5*b* col. 1, and the archaeological evidence indicates that the second king of this name, who reigned from A. D. 1769 to A. D. 1777, is here referred to. While the earlier MS. contains fifty-one pictures, the later has only forty-eight, notwithstanding the fact that the number of Miracles in it is larger, and has some introductory compositions relating to the time, and manner, and order, and seasons of the reading of the Miracles. The pictures in the manuscript are most interesting from a comparative point of view, because they enable us to note the modifications in the method of treatment which have crept in between the periods in which the earlier and the later MSS. were written. They prove, too, that there was a traditional manner of illustrating the Miracles of the Virgin, and also that the artist considered himself free to make small modifications which did not interfere with the motif of the old design. It is to be noted also that at the time they were painted the artist felt obliged to fill up the background of his illustrations and to enclose them also within borders which had the effect of giving an air of greater finish to his work. That the reader of the following pages may have the opportunity of comparing the artists' work of both periods throughout, Lady Meux decided to give coloured reproductions of every picture in each volume, and they have been interleaved in the English text as nearly as possible with the Miracles which they illustrate, the oldest naturally coming first.

It will be noticed that besides a selection of Miracles the manuscripts among other things contain two accounts of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary[1]; and the history of the travels of the Virgin and Child in Egypt which the Archbishop Theophilus received from Mary herself; and the Salutations to the Members of the Body of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The last composition is as interesting as remarkable, for in it the name, and virtues, and members of the body of the Virgin are lauded in forty-two verses, each containing five lines. In them the Virgin is likened unto a "flower of springtime", the "Zion of God", the "Ark of the Law", the "Two Tables of the Law", etc., and for some of his epithets, similes, and allusions the writer drew inspiration from the Song of Solomon. It is not easy to explain why the Salutations should be forty-two in number, or why they were directed to be said forty-two times; that some special significance was attached to this number by Biblical writers seems clear from such passages as Numbers xxxv. 6, and Revelation xi. 2; xiii. 5. It will be also remembered that the Negative Confession of the

Book of the Dead of the ancient Egyptians contained forty-two addresses, i. e., one to each of the forty-two gods in the Hall of Maâti, wherein the soul of the deceased was weighed.

Of the apocryphal literature given in this volume the most important example is the text of the "History of Ḥannâ, the Mother of the Blessed Virgin Mary"; it is edited from a small octavo manuscript in the Lady Meux Collection, which I believe to be unique. The work is divided into seven sections, each of which was intended to be read on a certain day of the week. The author seems to have drawn upon certain ancient traditions concerning Ḥannâ, but his commentary upon them is an independent work. According to him Ḥannâ's maternal ancestress was called Faustina, who was a lady of noble birth, and who prophesied that her seventh granddaughter would bring forth the "blessed moon", i. e., Ḥannâ. The statement which he makes with reference to the origin of the Virgin Mary is very remarkable. According to it the seed from which she sprang was placed by the Almighty in the body of Adam in the form of a white pearl, one half of which was formed of dust, when He created him. From the body of Adam it passed into Seth, and from Seth to Enos, and so into the bodies of all the Patriarchs, one after the other, from Abraham to David, and from David to Joachim Ḥannâ's husband. During this long period the seed remained in a quiescent state; it "neither perished nor made itself manifest", and it did not pass into the body of any one of the wives of the Patriarchs from Eve downwards. When Ḥannâ had been married to Joachim nine years, during which period they had suffered much tribulation at the hands of their kinsfolk and acquaintances in Israel, both husband and wife went into the temple of God and prayed in great bitterness of spirit. That same night God appeared unto Ḥannâ in a vision, in the form of a white bird which came down from heaven; in days of old it had overshadowed the Cherubim who guarded the Ark of the Covenant, and it had beneath its wings the hand of a man, which grasped within it the cord of life. This bird was the spirit of life, and it took up its abode by Divine agency in Ḥannâ's body. Now when Ḥannâ and Joachim were together, and the seed in the form of a white pearl, which was to form the flesh of the Virgin Mary, was transferred to her body, it united with the spirit of life, and germinated forthwith, and the Mother of our Lord began her material existence. This, in brief, is the remarkable account of the conception of the Virgin Mary by Ḥannâ, which is given by our author, and which the artist has tried, not very successfully, to represent pictorially. (See Plate cii).

A perusal of this History of Ḥannâ proves that at the time when it was written the mother of Mary had been endowed by her adorers with many of the attributes which belonged to her daughter, and that the honour paid to her was, in many respects, little inferior to that paid to the Virgin Mary. Ḥannâ and her husband Joachim are mentioned as being the father and mother of the Virgin Mary before the end of the IVth century, and before the close of the VIIIth century Ḥannâ was revered as a saint in the Eastern Church. In the following centuries legends of many kinds clustered round her memory, and a series of miracles, which were declared to have been wrought in her name, or by means of her relics, appeared in Christian apocryphal literature. But whatever form her history may assume, or whatever variations may occur in it, the principal statements of every writer are based upon traditions which are as old as the early centuries of the Christian Era. The remarkable position which she held in the Ethiopian Church is proved by the fact that after the narrative of her life given in the following pages we have a series of "Salutations" to her name and memory, and to the various members of her body, which have been drawn up in imitation of those addressed to the Virgin Mary. From these we may learn the greatness of the power which she was believed to possess in heaven and upon earth.

The last document of the Lady Meux Collection printed in this volume contains a series of magical prayers which were drawn up and inscribed upon a long, narrow strip of parchment, and which were intended to serve as an amulet to protect the wearer against the attacks of unclean or evil spirits, and sicknesses of every kind. This document, like all others of the class, is very badly written, and is full of strange spellings and mistakes; but the contents are of considerable interest to all students of Oriental magic. The wearer of an amulet of the kind relied for exemption from calamities of every class, both spiritual and material, upon the knowledge of the names of the archangels and other celestial beings; by calling upon or pronouncing such names he or she caused the attacks of devils and fiends to be without effect. With a view of illustrating this class of literature, and the general contents of rolls of magical prayers, three supplementary texts have been added.

The group of Ethiopic texts of the works printed in this volume will be found at the end of the English translations, and they have been printed on one side of the paper for the convenience of the student. I have followed the originals as closely as I could, believing it far better to reproduce the text before me than to make an eclectic edition of the works. The variant readings and the additional texts found in the later manuscript of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary are given in their proper places, but the former only shew that the greater number of the variations which are found in different copies of the same work really belong to different versions, and that they are not variants in the true sense of the word. The translations have been made tolerably literal, and a Biblical style has been adopted here, as elsewhere, because, as the late Professor William Wright often said, it suits the style and subject matter of the works. In a few places the text has been paraphrased. Interleaved with the translations are the long series of coloured plates, so that the reader may follow the narratives both by word and by picture.

The translations have been printed on one side of the paper only, for only by this means could the group of pictures which sometimes illustrate a miracle be brought near the text to which they relate. The binding of the volume is a careful copy of that of the original manuscripts, and the pattern on the covers has been stamped from a brass block which has been specially cut for the purpose. The printing has been carefully executed by the firm of W. Drugulin of Leipzig, and Dr. Chamizer, their manager, has superintended the work; the coloured plates form yet another example of Mr. Griggs' skill in reproducing with fidelity the illuminations and illustrations with which pious folk in all generations have delighted to ornament their sacred books.

The works printed in the following pages are of singular interest to those who study the history of the Church of Ethiopia and Abyssinia, and to the student of religion generally, and to the philologist; to these and many others they afford new material for investigating the development of Christian religious thought among Eastern nations. By publishing in a manner so thorough and comprehensive the valuable manuscripts which Lady Meux has in her possession, she is rendering a great service to Oriental research, and my most grateful thanks are due to her for permitting me to assist her in her public-spirited work.

INTRODUCTION.

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE MANUSCRIPTS.

1. The Ethiopic text of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, printed in the following pages is edited from the Lady Meux Manuscripts Nos. 2 and 3. The earlier of the two manuscripts (No. 2), which is called A throughout this volume, is a venerable vellum book which measures about 14 in. by 13 in., and consists of 105 leaves. The number of pictures in the volume is fifty-one. Each page, except one, when not occupied by a picture, contains two columns of writing, but the number of lines to a column varies. The oldest leaves of the book have usually seventeen or eighteen lines to the column, but a few, which seem to have been written by another hand, contain twenty-five. The unnumbered leaf which has been inserted between folios 1 and 2 has three columns to the page, and each complete column contains twenty-seven lines. The title, and the first few lines of each Miracle or composition, and the names of the Virgin Mary and of David the king are written in red. The MS. is bound in stout wooden boards, covered with purple leather stamped with a cross and with borders made of laced work patterns and scrolls, and the insides of the covers are lined with brightly coloured, flowered silk, the work probably of some Persian or Indian loom. It was originally written for a royal personage, for at the beginning and end of every Miracle we find the words, "May her prayer deliver our king", written in the ordinary hand found in the manuscript. But who the royal personage was cannot be said, for everywhere his name has been deleted, and that of "David" written by a later hand in its stead. Now, the Ethiopian Kings' Lists prove that three of the kings of Ethiopia were called David. The first reigned from A. D. 1382 to 1411; the second from A. D.

1508 to 1540; and the third from A. D. 1716 to 1721. Now the last of these cannot have been the king who is referred to in our manuscript, for the archaeological and palaeographical evidence derived from the volume makes it impossible; the first or the second king of the name must therefore be intended. It is generally thought that the Ethiopian scribes did not illustrate their books with coloured pictures before the end of the XIVth or the beginning of the XVth century, and this view is probably correct; admitting that it is, I believe that we shall be right in assigning our manuscript to the latter period, and in regarding it as one of the earliest examples of its class. Both text and pictures seem to have been produced before the first half of the XVIth century, in which period king David II reigned. The pictures which illustrate the Miracles are of neither equal merit nor value, but they are of the greatest importance as specimens of Ethiopian art of the earliest period. They belong to the time when the artist had attained considerable skill in drawing conventional representations of the Virgin Mary, and angels, and the like, but he did not know how to make a finished picture. He had not yet learned how to fill up the background, and he made some of his pictures so large that he left no room for a border. His paintings are mixtures of crude designs, which are filled up in places with painful attention to minute details of colouring in garments having variegated patterns made up of stripes and dots, and of pictorial hints of artistic conceptions which the artist or scribe was unable to carry out. With this manuscript, as with many others, it is impossible to make general deductions, for there is no standard with which the student may compare it. In some particulars the pictures resemble those found in Ethiopic MSS. of the XVIIth century, while in others they resemble those of a later date; but an examination of many illustrated Ethiopian manuscripts convinces me that the present example belongs to the period when the custom of illustrating books was not firmly established in Ethiopia, i. e., some time between A. D. 1400 and A. D. 1500. The artist seems to have been influenced by the pictures or illuminated manuscripts which were the work of Spanish or Italian artists, most probably of the former, for the faces of our Lord and the Virgin Mary are distinctly those of Spanish men and women. On the other hand, for many pictures he appears to have had no copies from which to borrow subjects, but to have drawn upon his own imagination for many of the scenes which he intended to illustrate the text before him. This portion of the work is of peculiar interest, for it reproduces for us the dress of the people among whom the artist lived, and the furniture of their houses, such as water pots, drinking vessels, anḳarîbs or bedsteads, trays from which guests ate their meals, etc. The devils with black, animal bodies, and human faces with protruding red tongues are, of course, the product of the native imagination, and represent pictorially ideas connected with demonology which had been current in the Eastern Sûdân and Ethiopia for centuries.

The manuscript was, in all probability, originally bound in plain, hard wooden boards, and the purple leather binding in which it now appears belongs to a period much later than that in which the oldest part of the volume was written. From the worn and greasy state of the bottom right hand corners of the leaves it is clear that it was much used in ancient days during services which were held either in a monastery or in a church, and the grease stains indicate that it was read in the night time. The following are the contents in the order in which they occur in the manuscript:—

2. The later of the two manuscripts (No. 3) containing the Ethiopic text of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, which is called B throughout this volume, is a vellum book which measures 12¾ in., by 11¼ in., and consists of 79 leaves. The number of the pictures which illustrate the text is forty-eight. Each page of the work, when not occupied by a picture, contains two columns of writing, and twenty-two lines form a complete column. The text is written in a fine, regular hand of the XVIIIth century. The title, and the first line or two of each Miracle or composition, and the name of the Virgin Mary and of the man who had the book written, are in red. The MS. is bound in stout, wooden boards, covered with brown leather stamped with a cross and with borders made of laced work patterns and scrolls; the insides of the covers are lined with brightly coloured, flowered silk. It was originally written for a man called Ḫayla Mâryâm, ኀይለ ፡ ማርያም ፡ whose name occurs at the beginning and end of all the compositions and Miracles written in the book except the last five, where for some reason Herakles ኤራቅሊስ ። is found. The probable explanation is that the last part of the manuscript was written at the expense of Herakles; but the names of the scribe and artist are not mentioned. The text throughout is the work of one scribe. The following are the contents in the order in which they should occur in the manuscript, but several of the leaves have been misplaced in the process of binding.

1 Introductory discourse to be read before the Miracles of the blessed Virgin Mary, followed by the rules which are to be observed in the reading of the same. Fol. 2*a*.

3. The Life of Ḥannâ, the mother of the Blessed Virgin Mary, is edited from a small octavo volume (Lady Meux manuscript No. 4) which was probably written in the XVIIIth century. It measures 7¹/₄ in. by 5¹/₄ in., and contains 81 leaves. The quires, which are signed with letters on the top left hand corners, are eight in number, and each contains ten leaves. Each page of text contains two columns, and usually the number of lines to a column is 16. The first few lines of each section are written in red, as well as the names of our Lord, and those of Ḥannâ, Mary, and Joachim; and the manuscript is bound in stout, wooden boards, which seem to belong to the period in which it was written. Ornamental head pieces consisting of designs in plaited work, painted in red and yellow, will be found on foll. 11*a*, 12*a*, 72*b* and 76*b*. The scribe's name was Gabra Krestôs ገብረ ፡ ክርስቶስ ፡ (see fol. 53*b*, col. 2), and he seems to have written for Gabra Maryâm ገብረ ፡ ማርያም ፡ (see fol. 53*a*, col. 2), who prays that in return his name may be inscribed by God upon a pillar of gold in letters of bright and shining light. The name of the artist who painted the pictures was Ḥabta Gabrăêl ሐብተ ፡ ገብርኤል ፡ (see fol. 10*b*, line 14). Here and there is a prayer on behalf of Tasfâ Mîkâêl ተስፋ ፡ ሚካኤል ፡ (see fol. 50*a*, col. 2, and fol. 54*b*, col. 1), but it is not clear why this man's name appears. From the note on fol. 10*a* we learn that the manuscript was written in the famous Dabra Lîbânôs in the country of Shoa. The contents are as follows:—

I. A series of pictures of saints, etc., painted in yellow and red upon a black ground, or in black and red upon a yellow ground, or traced in outline (Foll. 1—9).

4. Lady Meux Manuscript No. 5 is an amulet which consists of three narrow strips of parchment measuring together 6 ft. 4½ in. by 3¾ in. It is inscribed with a series of magical prayers on behalf of 'Ahĕta Mikâêl, and is ornamented at the top with a figure of the archangel Michael, and at the bottom with a rectangular design having eyes. The text is badly written, and is very difficult in places, to make out, and at the edges several letters have been rubbed away; the document was probably written about the middle of the XVIIIth century. The contents of this manuscript are of considerable interest, and are of a very comprehensive character from the point of view of magic; but the text is so corrupt that it is not easy to understand the writer's meaning in many places. The prayers are nine in number. In the first are enumerated the angels whose names will guard the man or woman who repeats them from the missile or weapon of any enemy, and from the attacks of the devils who bring internal diseases of every kind upon human beings. These names were also to be pronounced whenever a man or woman went into or near an old or unclean house, for in such places devils and fiends were supposed to dwell. One of the most powerful devils was Bôryâ, or Bâryâ, who seems to have been chief of a legion of devils, and to have had the power to smite a man with pleurisy, pneumonia, fever, colic, cholera, rheumatism, and the like. In the second prayer we have the story of a woman fiend whom our Lord and His disciples met as they were journeying through the country of Tiberias. She is said to have had the power to destroy travellers by land and sea, and to kill children; lightnings went forth from her eyes, and flame from her mouth, and her feet were like a wheel of fire. By our Lord's command she was burnt in the fire, and her ashes were scattered to the four winds of heaven. She was supposed to live in desert places and in unclean houses, and to have the power to smite people with inflammation of the stomach and bowels when visiting the latter. The third prayer is directed against bronchitis, pleurisy, the evil eye of an enemy, and the evil eye of Bâryâ, and contains a petition for merciful consideration at the Judgment. The fourth prayer consists of words which are supposed to have been written by Jeremiah the Prophet when he was bound hand and foot and cast into the pit. By the gift of prophecy he was enabled to declare the power of the "five-nailed Cross" of Christ, and to proclaim his own resurrection which should take place through it. This prayer is of rare occurrence. The fifth prayer is directed against the pains caused by wounds; it is not clear whether the Walda Karrâsḳî mentioned in it was a husband, father, son, or brother of 'Aḥĕta Mîkâêl. The sixth prayer is directed against Bâryâ, Masrayâ, and Ḍalwâgî, and the legions of devils under their rule, and is intended "to put them under a ban, and to fetter "them, and to break their power"; the names by which this was to be effected are Solomon, Shradrach, Meshach, Abednego, etc. The seventh prayer is directed against the diseases caused by cold aud chill, cholera, fistula, rheumatism, epilepsy, worms, and infectious skin diseases. It is ordered to be written down and worn by the woman who is bearing children, to whom and to whose children it shall be of "great advantage" when they are being suckled by her. Following the prayer comes the curious story of Socinius, who married a wife and begot a male child; soon after the birth of the child a female devil called Ursula came and killed him and went away. On this Socinius took his spear, and mounted his horse, and rode off to seek and to slay her. On the way he found an old woman sitting under a tree, and she told him that Ursula was to be found in a certain garden; and when he entered this garden he found her seated in the company of devils. Socinius rode at her and drove his spear into her right side, and killed her, but before she died she swore by the Archangels of God, and by the three Holy Children that she would never contend against the name of Socinius, that she would never enter into any church where his name was being commemorated, nor approach any house, or place, where the prayer was to be found. Hence the woman who wore an amulet inscribed with the name of Socinius was protected against the attacks of Ursula, the slayer of children, and against the sicknesses and diseases which her companion devils might attempt to bring upon her. The eighth prayer is directed against the fiends Zâr and Ṣalâwâgî, and contained a number of names the recital of which would enable the wearer of the amulet to fetter and break their power. The ninth prayer is directed against miscarriage, and contains an entreaty that God will stablish the blood of 'Ahĕta Mîkâêl and give her progeny; the names invoked by her are those of the powers which control the hail and the winds. Finally she beseeches God, "to Whom nothing is impossible", not to slay the child in her body, and to destroy utterly the names of Bôryâ and of the devils and fiends who smite men with diseases.

With the view of illustrating the contents of Ethiopian amulets I have appended the texts and translations of three good examples of the principal varieties; the translations will be found at the end of the Introduction, and the texts at the end of the volume.

II. THE CONTENTS OF THE MANUSCRIPTS.

THE MIRACLES OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

The Miracles of the Virgin Mary preserved in Ethiopic are, for the most part, translations of Arabic versions which were made from originals written either in Coptic or in one of the languages of Southern Europe, such originals forming parts of one or more of the great Collections of Legends of the Virgin which were current in Europe during the XIth and XIIth centuries of our era. The Ethiopic translations were made, I believe, in the XIVth or XVth century, and in spite of their passage through Arabic into Ethiopic, the narratives of the miracles exhibit Western influence and treatment to a remarkable degree.

The original home of the Miracles of the Virgin was Jerusalem and its immediate neighbourhood, and there is good reason to believe that a large number of them were in circulation in Syria and Egypt long before the end of the IVth century, and as about a century later (A.D. 494) Bishop Gelasius and the Council condemned at Rome the "Transitus, i. e., Assumptio sanctae Mariae", we may assume that compositions which recorded miracles wrought by her were included among the miscellaneous apocryphal works which were condemned at the same time. But no condemnation, even by the highest ecclesiastical authorities, could stop the spread of literature dealing with the miraculous, and the Christians who were both pious and superstitious caused copies of the Miracles of the Virgin to be multiplied everywhere. It is doubtful if the clergy would declare such works to be harmful to the soul, for the writer and reader of them understood each other, and both felt that the real purpose of books of miracles was to amuse as well as to edify. Between the Vth and the XIth centuries works which dealt with the life and miracles of the Virgin became exceedingly popular, and before the end of the XIth century it had become the fashion in Europe to form "Collections" or "Cycles" of miracles, which were issued, as it were, under authority, and were copied in monasteries and other places as authentic and standard works. Wherever a church was built in honour of the Virgin Mary the pious hastened to provide the clergy with a copy of the Book of her Miracles, and each church thus became a new centre for the propagation of stories of her power, and of the love and mercy which she was ever ready to shew to men, women, and children. During the XIIth, XIIIth and XIVth centuries further "Collections" of miracles were formed, and when the printing press superseded the scribes devout men reproduced by its means numberless copies of the narratives of the miraculous, which had been collected by the pious of by-gone generations. In the course of collecting and editing many of the miracles assumed new forms, and many additions were made to the original stories; parallels were collected and, together with variant narratives, were incorporated into the great mass of legends of the Virgin which sprang up in the East. As time went on, manuscript copies of such "Collections" were carried into the East and were translated into Arabic, and, probably by way of Egypt, they entered Ethiopia, where they were received joyfully. In a very short time Ethiopic translations or versions were made, and native scribes and artists devoted their time and energies to the production of manuscripts which were similar to those that are reproduced in this volume. The earliest works of this kind would probably contain only "foreign" miracles, but in process of time "native" miracles would be added to them. In the Lady Meux Manuscripts Nos. 2 and 3 we have numerous examples of both classes of miracles, and it is not difficult to find the sources of most of those which may be described as "foreign". Among those for which equivalents in European languages have been identified may be mentioned the following:—

I. The Virgin Mary and Bishop Dexius (see page 20). According to the Ethiopic text the Virgin Mary received from the bishop a copy of a collection of her miracles which he had made, and she was so pleased with him that she gave him an episcopal throne and a garment which she had obtained from heaven, and at the same time she told him that none of his successors should occupy the former or wear the latter. After his death a presumptous successor took his seat upon the throne, and arrayed himself in the apparel, in spite of the warnings of the clergy; but he was suddenly smitten by the angel Râguêl, and he fell from the throne and died immediately. In this story we at once recognize the miracle which the Virgin Mary wrought for Hildefonsus of Toledo, to whom she gave an alb; his successor Siagrius tried to put it on, but died in the act of doing so (see H. L. D. Ward, Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii, p. 604). The story of the gift of the alb is told in the life of Hildefonsus by Cixila, Bishop of Toledo, in the following words:— Et elevatis oculis suis suspexit in circuitu ejus, et vidit omnem absidem ecclesiae repletam Virginum turmis de canticis David admodulata suavitate aliquid decantantes. Aspiciensque in eam (ut ipse sibi bene conciis et bene charissimis referebat) sic eum allocuta est voce: "Propera in occursum, serve "Dei charissime, accipe munusculum de manu mea, quod de thesauro Filii mei tibi "attuli; sic enim tibi opus est, ut benedictione tegminis quae tibi delata est, in meo "tantum die utaris; et quia oculis fidei fixis in meo semper servitio permansisti, "et in laudem meam diffusa in labiis tuis gratia tam dulciter in cordibus fidelium "depinxisti, et vestimentis gloriae jam in hac vita orneris, et in futuro in promp- "tuariis meis cum aliis servis Filii mei laeteris" (Migne, Patrologiae, Tom. xcvi. col. 48). The same story occurs in connexion with St. Bonet, Bishop of Clermont, in Auvergne, A.D. 689—699. To him also the Virgin gave a garment, and when he proclaimed what had been done for him, another ecclesiastic went to the Church of St. Michael, hoping that the same favour would be shewn to him, and began to put on St. Bonet's apparel; as he was doing this he was struck dead.

See G. F. Warner, Miracles de Nostre Dame collected by Jean Mielot, London, 1885, p. 19.

II. The Virgin Mary and the scribe who wrote her name in gold (see page 28). In the Ethiopic text the name of the scribe is given as Damianus, and he is said to have written the Virgin's name in gold, and silver, and ናዝወርድ፡ nazward, which word I have rendered by "rose-coloured paint", believing the word to be connected with the Arabic نسرين "rose". In return for this devotion to her the Virgin takes him to heaven. Of this story we have two versions in Latin, and one in French; see A. Lecoy de la Marche, Anecdotes Historiques, Légendes, et Apologues, tirés du Recueil inédit d'Étienne de Bourbon, p. 119; and Mussafia, Marienlegenden, Heft V. pp. 36, 37. In all three the monk is nameless, and besides writing Mary's name in colours he is said to have kissed it wherever he found it; when he falls sick the Virgin visits him, and at his death takes his soul to heaven. The following will be useful for purposes of comparison.

Étienne de Bourbon.

De monacho qui nomen beate Virginis consueverat vel consuetus erat scribere tribus coloribus, auro, minio, croco, quando in libris occurrebat, conscribebat, et ejus horas devote dicere solitus erat, et nomen ejus osculabatur inventum inscriptum devote. Cum autem sacramenta omnia recepisset et graviter laboraret, cuidam fratri, longe a domo infirmorum jacenti invigilanti, visum est quod Beata Virgo de celo descenderet at dictum infirmum, et juxta lectum ejus diceret ei: "Ne timeas, fili; te enim "oportet gaudere cum celicolis, quia fuit "tibi cure nomen meum honorare; nominis "signacionem accipiens, in libro vite as-"criptus, in celo mecum vive. Surge ergo "hinc et sequere me." Et in celo con-

Tranquillitatis amator monachus quidam mente et corpore castus, ut creditur, gloriosissime virgini intimo cordis affectu deserviebat et horas illius specialiter et devotius stando cantabat. Hic itaque artibus utilioribus deditus sacras scripturas scribere consueverat, in quibus sacratissime virginis nomen triplici colore pingebat. Quod scriptum auro, aduro, croceo vel tyro, et absque colore nigro, suppliciter adorabat et sepe deosculans corde semper et ore et opere illud gerebat. Tandem iuvenis pius et quietus infirmatus est et crescente dolore a fratrum consortio remotus est. Quid moror? Pater monasterii mox advocatur et, si quid erat sinistrum, eger humiliter confitetur. Tunc

unus ex fratribus, in dormitorio longe a domibus infirmorum semivigil jacens, mestorum consolatricem e celo venientem prospexit. Que juxta lectum egroti stans hylari vultu talia dicere cepit: "O "bone fili, ne paveas! Te enim cum "celicolis gaudere oportet. Et quoniam "tibi non fuit honerosum meum nomen "purpureum scribere, nominis sanctum "omen accipies et in libro viventium "scriptus super celos mecum amodo vives. "Surge igitur, dilectissime, et sequere me! "Ero enim perenniter tecum ad solamen, "que olim tecum eram, dum scribebas et "honorabas meum celebre nomen." Tunc imperatrix celorum Maria a terris discessit et sibi famulantem secum deduxit.

The description in the French version of the manner in which the scribe painted Mary's name and kissed it is as follows:—

sainte escriture et escrire;
le nun nostre Dame peignoit
de trois colors et escrioit,
et d'or et d'azur et de blans;
de vermeillon et de safran
le nun nostre Dame peignit,
ja noire color n'i meist,
quant ere escriz, si l'auroit,
apres mout sovent lo baisoit;
en cuer, en boche et en ovre
le nun nostre Dame porte. (ll. 9—20).

III. The Virgin Mary and Bishop Abbas (see page 29). According to the Ethiopic text the name of the ecclesiastic who cut his hand off because of the carnal desire which was stirred up in him through the kiss of a woman upon it, was Abbas, and he is called "Bishop of Rome" therein. But from Add. 33,956 (see WARD, Catalogue of Romances, vol. II. p. 674), he was called Caesarius, and he is said to have become Pope. In the Legenda Aurea, (ed. T. GRAESSE, Dresden and Leipzig, 1846, p. 367) the story is told of Pope Leo I., who died A.D. 461, in the following words:— Leo papa, ut in miraculis beatae virginis legitur, dum in ecclesia sanctae Mariae majoris missam celebraret, et dum fideles per ordinem communicaret et quaedam matrona manum ejus osculata fuisset, ex hoc in eum vehemens carnis tentatio insurrexit, at vir Dei in semet ipsum saevissimus ultor insurgit et eadem die manum se scandalizantem occulte penitus amputavit et a se rejecit. Interea murmur oriebatur in populo, cur summus pontifex divina more solito non celebraret. Tunc Leo ad beatam virginem se convertit et ejus providentiae totaliter se commisit. Tunc illa continuo sibi adstitit et manum illi suis sanctissimis manibus restituit et conformavit jubens, ut procederet et filio suo sacrificium immolaret. Leo igitur omni populo, quid sibi contigerit, praedicavit et manum restitutam omnibus evidenter ostendit. Probably as a result of what had happened, we read that Leo Chalcedonense concilium celebravit, solas virgines ibidem velari instituit. See also MUSSAFIA, Studien zu den mittelalterlichen Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 75; and Heft II. pp. 4 and 88.

IV. THE VIRGIN MARY AND ISAAC THE MONK (see page 31). The Ethiopic text relates that the Virgin promised Isaac, a monk, to whom she shewed herself in all her beauty, that he should be with her in heaven in three days. As a parallel may be quoted the story given by WARNER from Mielot (Miracles de Nostre Dame, No. 66, p. xxxv) in which we are told that a child prebend offered some cake to a wooden image of the child Jesus, and that Mary told him that, as a reward, he should be with herself and her Son in Paradise in three days; the child took to his bed and died on the third day. Mary begged the boon from Christ, Who said, "Belle mere, lenfant sera dedens trois jours auecques "moy et papera; car il sera couronne en mon paradis. Il ne fist pieca si bon "papin." See also HEROLT, Discipuli Promptuarium, No. 652.

V. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE CHILD MARY (see page 33). In the Ethiopic text the Virgin is made to promise the child Mary that she shall be with her in three days because she had such a strong love for the festival of the Virgin.

The story, however, seems only to be a variant of that given by Mr. WARNER, Miracles de Nostre Dame, No. XXI. p. xvii, wherein the Virgin promised a girl called Muse, or Musa, that if she forsook the follies of the world she should be with her in thirty days. On the twenty-fifth day the girl fell sick, and on the thirtieth she died. For the Latin and French versions of the story see MIGNE, Patrologiae, tom. LXXVII, col. 348; NEUHAUS, ADGAR's Marienlegenden, p. 42; WARD, Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii. p. 620. In the Latin text the Abbot Probus tells the story of his sister Musa.

VI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE PAINTER (see page 34). The Ethiopic text merely reproduces a well known legend of which several versions are known in Latin and French; see WARNER's Miracles, No. LXIV, p. xxxiv; and Mr. WARD's Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii. p. 628. The shorter form of the story in Latin is as follows:— Quidam pictor diabolum cum cornibus, et caeteris membris, ut turpius poterat, et magis horribilem pinxit. Idem vero imaginem Beatae Mariae Virginis ita decentem, et ita pulchram, ut potuit, depinxit diversis coloribus. De hoc vero diabolus iratus, et invidens, festinanter accedens ad pictorem, quaesivit dicens: Cur se tam horribilem, et deformem, et Beatam Virginis Mariam tam pulchram, et decentem depingeret? Qui respondit, quod ita se res in veritate haberet, sicut facta pictura ostendit. Diabolus vero iratus pictorem ab alto, ubi depinxit imaginem B. Mariae Virginis quadam die voluit praecipitate, confregitque ligna in quibus stabat pictor, qui et casum periit: mox imago piissime Virginis pictori manum porrexit, et eum ne caderet firmiter retinuit, sicque eum a daemone custodivit. See HEROLT, Discipuli Fromptuarium de Miraculis B. Mariae Virginis, No. 718. (In Discipulis Redivivus, Augsburg, 1728, p. 897.) The longer form is as follows:— Pictor quidam pro vitae suae merito Dominae nostrae familiaris, in partibus Flandriae fecerat sibi nomen doctae manus artificio. Hic quoque quotiescumque pingere diabolum necesse habebat, turpem turpiter sicut ars ei suggerere poterat, expressius figurabat: Cui ille in visione noctis apparuit, et cur eum sic irritaret, cum furore, et ira quaesivit. Pictor respondit bene hoc ago, quia semper te passus sum omnium, quae feci malorum incentorem, et adhuc turpium cogitationum moliris insidias, quibus emollitam animae meae demoliaris constantiam. Et Sathan graves minas intentans, monebat ut a sua laesione cessaret. Sed ille ex hoc ipso animatus est, et magis quam ante paratus suscitare Leviathan. Post-modum vero una dierum, ipse in porticu cujusdam Ecclesiae Beatae Mariae Virginis imaginem pinxit, et juxta possibilitatem artificii, sicut decebat operae vario picturae eidem gloriam, et honorem dedit. Sed et juxta illud, quod serpenti dictum est: Ipsa conteret caput tuum, subtus pedes imaginis diabolum figuravit, nigris coloribus turpem, et tenebrosum, sicut decebat amatorem turpitudinis, et Principem tenebrarum. Quod ille non aequis oculis aspiciens, malignandi potestatem a Deo expetiit, et accepit, sed sibi ad contumeliam, Christo, et Matri ejus ad gloriam: adhuc enim suspensis trocleis, et supposito firmiter tabulato, monstrum illud pingebatur, et ecce turbo vehemens omnes illas artis pictoriae machinas concussit, et in terram excussit. Quod ut persensit homo stupidus ad imaginem Domini levavit cor pariter, et manum; quae, mirum dictu, donec venirent, et qui ei subvenirent, manu injecta ipsum retinuit, et servavit illaesum. See Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Historiale, Lib. VII. cap. ciiii. p. 259 (Vol. IV of Bibliotheca Mundi, Douay, 1624). See also Wright, Latin Stories, No. XXXI. p. 34.

VII. The Virgin Mary and Zacharias (see page 38). In the Ethiopic text the young Roman makes a chaplet of fifty roses daily, and presents it to the Virgin, and when the season of roses is over he offers salutation instead of roses. This version is, however, probably a variant of the story of a certain boy who, with his playmates, made garlands, but while his companions placed theirs upon their own heads, he offered his to the Virgin Mary. When he grows up he becomes a monk, and is eventually promoted to the rank of abbot; as a monk he said one hundred Aves to the Virgin daily. Once, when on a journey through a wood, he knelt down to say his Aves, which he had forgotten, and a thief, who was going to stab him, saw the prayers that fell from his mouth turn into roses, etc. The story in the Latin runs:— Erat quidam nobilis habens uxorem Deo, et B. Mariae devotam, sed cum non haberent filium, rogabant Deum, ut eis prolem daret, quod et factum est. Quam cum omni, qua poterant, diligentia nutrierunt. Cum autem filius ad annos discretionis pervenisset, et videret alios pueros crinalia de rosis, et floribus habere, similiter faciebat, et ad Ecclesiam deportabat, ubi imaginem gloriosae Virginis invenit, et ei crinalia offerebat, et ejus capiti devote imponebat, et sic quotidie faciebat, cum ei tempus aderat oportunum. Venit ergo tempus, cum parentes ejus eum nuptiis tradere vellent, eis pro viribus restitit, sed virginitatem suam Deo, et Beatae Mariae Virgini obtulit, dicens, se Deo et Beatae Mariae Virgini Matri ejus velle perpetuo famulari. Post vero factus est Monachus, et in bona vita de die in diem in melius proficiens, sed cum videret, quod priorem consuetudinem et devotionem ulterius facere non posset, quia rosas et flores non habebat, eo quod erat Monachus, non ei licebat floribus occupari, ne alios scandalizaret, cogitans tamen, quod quotidie centum Ave Maria diceret, et inde crinale B. Mariae faceret, sicque faciebat quotidie cum lachrymis, et puro corde. Factum est una dierum, ut pro negociis Monasterii sui (quia factus erat Abbas) viam procixam ire deberet, oblitus est sui promissi, et equum cum suis famulis ascendens per silvam magnam perrexerunt, et cum eum omnes praecessissent, et solus esset, coepit cogitare, quod illo die laudes folitas B. Virgini non solvisset. Statim descendens de equo, consuetas orationes devote persolvit. Et cum sic statet in oratione, venit quidam latro post tergum volens eum occidere, et equum suum, et alias res auferre. Et cum a tergo eo ignorante, lanceam vibraret, vidit puerum pulcherrimum de ore ipsius quasi singulas rosas recipere, et inde crinale cum centum rosis compositum sibi puer imposuit. Quod videns latro, ad pedes ejus procidit, et veniam ab eo petiit, narrans omnem rei seriem, et totius facti integram veritatem. Factusque est bonus Monachus, et vitam bonam usque ad diem mortis suae laudabiliter, et feliciter consumavit, et in pace quievit. HEROLT, Promptuarium de Miraculis B. Mariae Virginis, No. 704. See WARNER, op. cit., No. XLV, p. XXVIII; WARD, Catalogue, p. 668; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 71. There is a German version which agrees with the Ethiopic in making the Virgin herself take the roses from the lips of Zacharias; see F. H. VON DER HAGEN, Gesammtabenteuer, vol. iii, p. 595.

VIII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BLIND GIRL (see page 50). According to the Ethiopic text Elisabeth, the daughter of Badramân and Gêrâ Anest, was cured of her blindness by a few drops of the Virgin's milk applied to her eyes. Several examples of cures effected by the Virgin's milk are mentioned in Books of Miracles, and among them may be noted the case of the monk who was cured of cancer in the lips; and of Fulbert, Bishop of Chartres, A.D. 1007—1029, who was visited on his sick-bed by the Virgin, and restored to health by three drops of her milk. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 637, Nos. 1 and 2.

IX. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE TWO BROTHERS WHO WERE SCRIBES (see page 55). The text of this miracle seems to be corrupt, and it is difficult to translate. We perhaps find its equivalent or parallel in the story of the Two Brothers of Rome, who were called Peter and Stephen. The former was sent to purgatory for avarice, and the letter was "damned for wrongs done against "St. Lawrence and St. Agnes"; Stephen was, however, rescued out of hell itself, and restored to life, for thirty days' penance. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 607; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 25.

X. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE LAME MAN (see page 62). The Ethiopic text speaks of a "man in a certain country of the Franks, who had a lame foot", and this at once proclaims the European source of the miracle. Jean Mielot (ed. WARNER, Miracles, No. LXV. p. XXXV) tells how a man who was suffering from "mal des ardents" had his foot amputated, in despair of cure; and how, after praying in the cathedral, he fell asleep, when his foot was restored to him whole by the Virgin, so that he walked away on his two feet. The "mal des ardents", or "feu sacré", seems to have been a disease of a cancerous nature which was of terrible virulence, and the ravages of which in the north of France in 1128 and 1129 are often described by writers of the time. The name of the city in which the miracle took place is given as Viviers; see WARD, Catalogue, p. 619. Another miracle mentions how Robert of Joüy was turned out of the Cathedral at Soissons because of the horrible smell of his putrefying foot, and how he was cured by the Virgin. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 727; and GAUTIER DE COINCY, Les Miracles de la Sainte Vierge (ed. POQUET, Paris, 1857), coll. 177—190.

XI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BISHOP WHO WAS A LEPER (see page 64). As parallels of this miracle may be mentioned the case of the leprous woman at Soissons, and of the Cistercian monk who was afflicted with "rosea gutta" in his face, both of whom were cured by the Virgin Mary by wiping away the disease with her sleeve. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 630, No. 23; and p. 645, No. 8; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 26.

XII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND SOPHIA THE ABBESS OF MOUNT CARMEL (see page 68). This story of the abbess who was guilty of unchastity is found in many collections of Miracles of the Virgin Mary, and it seems to have been very popular. The Ethiopic text is characterized by several peculiarities, and for purposes of comparison the two oldest Latin versions of the story are here appended.

1. Fuit quaedam sanctimonialium, nomine et actione Abbatissa, strenue sancti

regiminis curam exequens, et spirituali zelo subjectam sibi congregationem ad sacri ordinis custodiam pro rigore constringens: sed quia bonorum profectus pravis animis livoris ingerit poenas, coeperunt ei Moniales pro bonis mala rependere: et pro impensa mirifici cura regiminis, odiorum studia exercere: sociavit quoque se livori earum insidiatoris antiqui semper infesta malignitas: nam ejus supplantata fraudibus, illa pia Mater cum Dapifero suo incesti crimen incurrit, et concepit: nec tamen destitit regulari rigore subjectum sibi gregem, ad observantiam ordinis coarctare, et inutiles vagandi licentias singulis denegare. Instante autem tempore partus, tam per incessum, quam per cibum a Monialium muliebri sagacitate impraegnata deprehenditur: resque singularum relatu in noticiam omnium perducitur: omnesque se in ea causam accusationis invenisse exultant, quam suis voluptatibus adversam iudicabant. Scribuntur literae accusatrices criminis deprehensi Episcopo, in cujus ille locus erat dioecesi. Imminebat, illa nesciente, Pontificis adventus, et ipsa onere suo, quod studiose celaverat, jam gravis sibimet quid ageret, ignorabat. Erat autem privata capella, ubi quotidiano usu solebat horas Beatae Virginis dulciori, quo poterat affectu, decantare, hanc ingrediens, laudes solitas devotissime persolvit. Finitis horis toto corde, et corpore se in oratione prosternens, precibus lachrymosis, ac profundis suspiriis, piissimam Dei genitricem Mariam obnixius orabat, ejus interventu, et reatus sui veniam obtinere, et horrenda opprobria imminentis sibi confusionis evadere. Inter hoc subitaneo depressa somno, in silentium commutatis clamoribus obdormivit, cui dormienti pia virgo duobus commitantibus Angelis apparuit, et moestam clementer alloquens, ait: Audivi orationem tuam, noveris me tibi a dulcissimo filio meo impetrasse, et peccati veniam, et a confusione quam times, liberationem plenissimam: tunc duobus Angelis astantibus: praecepit eam prolis onere, quo gravabatur, exonerare, et quidam eremitae in vicino posito deferre. Cui, et mandavit, ejus curam per septem annos gerere, quod et fecerunt. Denique Abbatissa evigilans, omni quo prius cruciabatur onere carere se sensit, et Deo, et liberatrici suae incessabiles gratias egit. Interim invitatus Antistes veniens, capitulum intravit, Abbatissam vocari fecit, quae ingressa, in loco sibi solito praesuli sedere festinavit, quam accedentem, Antistes opprobriis aggreditur, et injuriis fatigatam citius exire compellit, duos quoque clericos, qui divulgatum crimen explorent post eam mitti, qui accedentes, et attendentes, nullumque in ea signum uteri praegnantis deprehendentes, innocentiam ejus praesuli renunciant: sed illos ipse pecuniis corruptos existimans, per semetipsum rei veritatem curiosus explorat, nullumque in ea criminis objecti signum inveniens, ad pedes ejus corruit, veniamque de illatis injuriis exposcit: omnibus, qui ei crimen injecerant, vehementer iratus praecepit, ut de monasterio citius exirent. Abbatissa vero eas licet malevolo animo, tamen vera dixisse perpendens: ad honorem liberatricis suae, maluit peccatum, quod fecerat, Episcopo revelare, quam criminatrices suas adversa pati permittere. Itaque coram eo se humiliter prosternit, eique omnem rei ordinem pandit. Miratur ille, et Deum in immensa gloriosae genetricis suae pietate benedicens, duos ex clericis ad eremitam pro causa pueri solicitus inquirenda transmittit: qui euntes, et de puero sciscitantes, edocti sunt ab homine puerum ea die natum, et a duobus iuvenibus ad eum paulo ante delatum, et ex parte Beatae Mariae sibi ab eis commendatum. Et revertentes, omnia Pontifici referunt. Laetus igitur, puerum, ut Mater Dei praeceperat, cum homine Dei septem annis nutriendum permisit, quem post in sui curam susceptum ad literas posuit, ac religione, et scientia clarum educavit. Ipso quoque tandem in Domino requiescente in Episcopatu ei successit, et Beatae Dei genetricis Mariae gloriam vita et verbis magnifice praedicavit. VINCENT DE BEAUVAIS, Spec. Hist., Lib. VII. cap. 86, p. 252.

2. Item aliud fidelium narracione comparatum est, quod quaedam abbatissa, beate Virgini devote serviens, sub arta custodia servabat sibi subditas moniales, licencias inutiles negans; ex qua causa eis est odio habita. Cum autem, eis procurantibus, esset impregnata et seducta, facti penitens et graviter dolens, non cessabat eas arte custodire et beatam Virginem rogare. Appropinquante partu et utero intumescente, accusatur episcopo suo, qui descendit ad factum inquirendum. Cum autem in mane esset facienda inquisicio, tota nocte se contulit ad rogandam beatam Virginem, facta prius cum lacrimis confessione. Apparuit ei dormienti beata Virgo, dicens ejus preces a filio suo exauditas pro venia obtinenda et confusione vitanda, et dixit duobus angelis, qui eam comitabantur, ut eam liberarent ab onere pueri et eum cuidam incluso vicino deportarent alendum ex parte ipsius, monens eam ut de cetero sibi caveret et invigilaret in custodia suî et suarum. Que evigilans invenit se ab omni onere et dolore liberatam. In mane in capitulo accusatur: negat se esse pregnantem; inquiritur: invenitur vacua et sana et integra; quod noscens episcopus, prostravit se ad pedes ejus, veniam petens pro illatis injuriis et conviciis et imposito crimine, volens de abbacia emittere omnes qui eam infamaverant. Illa autem hoc non ferens, apertam episcopo veritatem fatetur, et invenit per inclusum quod duo juvenes ei puerum deportaverant ex parte beate Marie alendum usque ad septennium. Episcopus autem, pueri curam agens, instrui eum fecit et imbui litteris et moribus, et cum instructum reliquit suî in episcopatu successorem et egregium beate Marie predicatorem. II. p. 314; for an old English version see SMALL, English Metrical Homilies, 1862, p. 164; and compare WARD, Catalogue, p. 626; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 29.

XIII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE THIEF (see page 85). The story given in the Ethiopic text is clearly a version of the well-known legend of Ebbo, or Elbo, the thief who was sustained on the gallows for two days by the Virgin Mary. A common Latin version[1] is as follows:— Fuit latro quidam nomine Elbo; cum multociens res alienas raperet, unde et suos miserrime pasceret, sanctam Dei genitricem venerabatur ex corde, et etiam dum ad latrocinamdum pergeret, exorando eam devotissime salutabat. Cum ergo quadam vice ad latrocinandum pergeret, exorando ipsam, deprehenditur atque sine ulla miseratione suspenditur. Cumque elevatus de terra perbidium penderet, ecce in illo iduo beata Virgo suis manibus ipsum vivum et illaesum sustentavit. Illi vero qui illum suspenderant, cum ad ipsum redissent, et eum vultu hilari nihil mali patientem vidissent, dum guttur ejus transfigere volent, beata Virgo non permisit, sed manus suas gutturi anteposuit. Cognoscentes igitur illi quod gloriosa Virgo auxiliaretur ei, valde miriati dimiserunt eum. Qui abiens, factus est monachus, atque Deo et gloriosae ejus genetrici servivit devotissime omnibus diebus vitae suae. See WRIGHT, Latin Stories, No. CIX. p. 98.

The narrative of ÉTIENNE DE BOURBON (ed. Lecoy de la Marche, p. 103) is shorter, and contains variations; it reads:— Item legitur quod quidam fur habebat boni quod vigilias beate Marie in pane et aqua jejunabat, et, cum iret furari, semper

[1] A tolerably full account of this miracle is given by VINCENT DE BEAUVAIS, Hist. Spec., Lib. VII. cap. 116, p. 264.

Ave, Maria dicebat, rogans eam ne dimitteret eum mori in peccato illo. Cum autem captus suspenderetur, per triduum pependit, nec potuit mori. Cum autem vocaret transeuntes ut advocarent ei sacerdotem, adveniente eo et præposito cum aliis, removetur a patibulo, dicens quod virgo pulcherrima sustentaverat eum per pedes per triduum; promittens emendacionem, liber dimittitur. Still another Latin version is found in the Legenda Aurea (ed. GRAESSE, Cap. CXXXI. No. 5, p. 592), which reads:— Erat quidam fur, qui saepe latrocinia exercebat, sed beatam Mariam plurimum in devotione habebat et eam crebrius salutabat. Quadam igitur vice fur quaedam rapiens capitur et suspendio adjudicatur. Cum autem suspenderetur, continuo beata virgo ei affuit et suspensum tribus diebus, ut sibi videbatur, suis manibus sustentavit ita, quod nullam laesionem persensit. Illi vero, qui eum suspenderunt, casu inde transeuntes cum viventem et vultu hilari repererunt et arbitrantes, quod non bene fuisset laqueo adstrictus, gladio ipsum jugulare volebant, sed beata Maria ferentium gladio manum opponebat et illi sibi nil nocere poterant. Cognoscentes ergo referente illo, quod beata Maria sic eum juvabat, mirantes eum deposuerunt et amore virginis abire liberum dimiserunt. Qui abiens monasterium intravit et, quoad vixit, in servitio Dei genitricis permansit. See also WARD, Catalogue, p. 606; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 24.

XIV. THE VIRGIN MARY AND PHILEMON, THE SON OF EUPHEMIA, WHO BECAME A ROBBER (see page 88). A Latin version of this story will be found in the Legenda Aurea (ed. GRAESSE, Cap. CXXXI. No. 4, p. 591), but in it the mother is made to go to the church, to seize the Virgin's Child, and to carry Him home and lock Him up, having wrapped Him in a clean linen cloth, as a hostage for the safety of her son. To the Virgin the distracted mother says, "Igitur, sicut filius "meus mihi ablatus est, sic et ego filium tuum tibi auferam et obsidem pro filio "meo in custodiam ponam". Thus saying, Propius accessit et imaginem pueri, quam virgo in gremio bajulabat, auferens domum abiit accipiensque imaginem pueri ipsam in linteo mundissimo involvit et in archa recondens ipsam cum clave diligentius obfirmavit, bonum obsidem pro filio suo habere gaudens et ipsum diligenter custodiens. Et ecce sequenti nocte beata virgo juveni apparuit et januam carceris aperiens, inde ut exeat, praecepit eique dixit: matri tuae, fili dices, ut meum reddat filium, ex quo reddidi sibi suum. Qui exiens ad matrem venit et, qualiter beata virgo eum liberaverit, enarravit. Illa autem plurimum exsultans imaginem

pueri accepit et ad ecclesiam vadens beatae Mariae reddidit filium dicens: gratias vobis, domina, refero, quia mihi meum unicum filium reddidistis, et nunc vobis filium vestrum reddo, quia meum me recepisse profiteor.

XV. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WOMAN WHO BROUGHT FORTH A CHILD IN THE SEA (see page 91). The Ethiopic text follows the old Latin versions in attributing the miracle to the Virgin, and not to Saint Michael; the event is said to have happened when a number of pilgrims were on their way to the shrine of Mont St. Michel, and when Hildebert I. was the Abbot, A.D. 1011. See WARNER, Miracles, No. XXX. p. XXI; WARD, Catalogue, p. 602; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 26. The two oldest Latin versions read thus:—

I. In loco qui dicitur Tumba est Ecclesia sancti Michaelis Archangeli honorifice constructa, qui locus oceano cinctus, ipsius aestu terribilis est propter accessum et recessum maris advenientibus omnibus: et limina sancti Michaelis Archangeli petere desiderantibus, bis in die sinum praetendit, non autem ut caetera maria gradatim, verum praecipiti cursu, ac terrifico sonitu accurrens saepe intercepit iter agentes. Quadam igitur festivitate ipsius Archangeli, turbis ad ejus limina properantibus, ecce jam in medio arenae positis (erat autem inter eos mulier quaedam paupercula vicino portu omnino jam gravida) sonitus terribilis maris subito intonuit, et cunctis praepeti cursu amentium more fugientibus, illa mulier sola remansit: usu etiam pedum prae nimio dolore, et terrore, atque labore destituta (irruerant enim in eam dolores subiti), clamabat cum eiulatu, miserabiliter auxilium petens, sed unusquisque seipsum tueri cupiens, audire dissimulabat. Igitur humano deficiente auxilio, recurrit ad divinum: Deum lachrymabili voce invocans, et ejus genitricem Mariam, sanctumque Archangelum Michaelem. Populus quoque omnis ad hoc spectaculum consistens manus ad sidera tendens, Dei et Matris ejus auxilium flebiliter invocabat. Universis ergo Christi auxilium implorantibus advenit pia Dei genetrix, et ut ipsi mulieri videbatur, manica super eam projecta: ita intactam a terrisono impetu maris reddidit, ut nec minima etiam gutta totius abyssi vestimenta illius contigeret. Ibi vero quasi in tutissimo habitaculo posita, filium peperit, sine timore ullo permanens, donec iterum mare fluctus suos in se retrahens liberum iter eundi mulieri praeberet. Itaque cum puero ad littus venit, et quae sola in mari relicta erat, exiens jam non sola, miraculi spectaculum omni populo praebuit. See VINCENT DE BEAUVAIS, Spec. Hist., Lib. VII. Cap. 84, p. 252; and HEROLT, Promptuarium, p. 854.

II. Cum in festo Sancti Michaelis, ubi mare fluit et refluit bis in die, multi convenirent undique ad ecclesiam Beati Michaelis de Tumba, et quedam mulier vicina partui cum aliis ibi veniret, cum alii, audientes et videntes fluctum venientem, fugerent ut effugerent, dicta mulier, timore percussa, irruentibus in eam doloribus partus, cum invocaret beatam Virginem voce flebili, et illi qui erant in littore orarent pro ea, non valentes subvenire, affuit ei beata Virgo, manica sua ab ea undas maris et fluctus longe abigens, ita quod nec eam nec vestes ejus tangeret gutta aque. Que illesa, cum filio quem peperit, ad littus recipitur, omnibus astantibus gracias ei referentibus, qui eam sub mari illesam conservavit. See ETIENNE DE BOURBON (ed. LECOY DE LA MARCHE), Anecdotes Historiques, p. 99.

XVI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE DRUNKEN MONK (see page 136). This story is well-known, and copies of it are found in many manuscripts; see WARD, Catalogue, p. 612; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 27. HEROLT's Latin version (Fromptuarium, p. 856) is as follows:— Maria Virgo quemdam Monachum sibi devotum a diabolo liberavit, et etiam a consuetudine inebriandi revocavit: Unde legitur, quod cum quidam Monachus devotus Beatae Virginis Mariae cellarium Abbatiae intrasset, forti vino adeo se ingurgitavit, quod factus est quasi sine sensu. Ubi cum mansisset, post paululum a vino excitatus tentabat ire ad Ecclesiam per claustrum, occurrit ei diabolus in specie tauri maximi, volens ipsum cornibus transfodere. Tunc affuit ei quaedam Virgo speciosissima, diffusa caesarie super humeros suos, tenens in dextera ejus mappulam lineam, et increpans diabolum, et jubens eum a familia Dei discedere, statim utraque visio disparuit. Cum autem idem Monachus inceptum perageret iter, et Ecclesiae appropinquaret, affuit diabolus in specie canis horribilis, et ex impetu in eum exiliens, affuit et praedicta puella eum abire compellens, et eum iterum libertum faciens, et sic visio disparuit, et Ecclesiam intranti affuit diabolus in specie leonis immanissimi rugiens, et in eum impetum faciens, quasi eum devoraturus: sed apparuit statim Beata Virgo virgam in manu tenens contra diabolum, et comminans ei alia acriora supplicia sustinere, qui statim ut fumus disparuit. Puella autem praedictum Monachum per manum accipiens, fecit eum statim mente sanum ac sobrium, ac si nihil bibisset, et ad lectum suum reclinans, ei signum Crucis in fronte ejus imprimens, et monens, ne de caetero talia facere praesumetur, sed in mane peccatum suum confiteretur tali Monacho familiari suo, et quicquid imponeret adimpleret. Cum autem Monachus quaereret,

XVII. The Virgin Mary and Nicodemus (see page 137). This story as given in the Ethiopic text agrees substantially with the versions which are known to exist in Latin (Legenda Aurea, ed. Graesse, cap. LI. No. 4, p. 221), French (see Warner, Miracles, No. VII. p. x), and English (see Small, English Metrical Homilies, p. 160). According to one narrator the monk was a "Chancelier de Chartres", and according to another he was a wealthy knight who became a monk of Cîteaux; see Ward, Catalogue, p. 605; and Jehan Le Marchant (ed. Duplessis), Miracles de Notre-Dame de Chartres, Chartres, 1855, p. 184. The Latin version reads:—

Miles quidam dives ac nobilis saeculo abrenuntiavit et ordinem Cisterciensium introivit et quia litteras nesciebat, erubescentes monachi tam nobilem personam inter laicos deputari dederunt ei magistrum, si forte modicum addiscere posset et sub hac occasione inter monachos permaneret. Sed cum diu cum magistro fuisset et nihil omnino praeter haec duo vocabula: ave Maria, discere potuisset, haec tam avide retinuit, ut quocumque deambularet, quidquid ageret, ea incessanter ruminaret. Tandem moritur et in cimiterio cum aliis fratribus sepelitur, et ecce super ejus tumulum speciosum excrescit lilium et quodlibet folium: ave Maria litteris aureis habebat inscriptum. Currentes omnes ad tam grande spectaculum terram de tumulo effoderunt et radicem lilii de ore defuncto procedere repererunt. Intellexerunt ergo, quanta devotione illa duo verba dixerat, quem dominus tanti honore prodigii illustravit.

From the facts set forth above it is quite clear that a large proportion of the Ethiopian Miracles of the Virgin Mary printed in this volume are derived from Western sources, and a comparison of the Latin versions with the Ethiopic texts will shew that, as a whole, the general sense of the narratives has been well preserved. Proper names have suffered at the hands of the Arabic and Ethiopian translators, but this, after all, is only what is to be expected.

Among the selection of miracles here given are many which have no special characteristics, and which might as well have been written in the south of Europe as in Western Asia, or in North-east Africa, and for these numerous parallels might be found. Miracles in which the Virgin Mary gives food and clothing to the poor, both clergy and laity, or heals the sick, or mends a broken bone, or restores sight to the blind, or sets a prisoner free, or appears to the dying and supports and comforts them, are common in all Christian countries, and the only things in connexion with them which vary are the time, place, and circumstances. In the Collection before us, however, are a number which can hardly have been written anywhere outside Egypt or Ethiopia, or Syria. Thus the story of the two women who were robbed of their food on their way to Jerusalem (see page 39) is consistent with what is known of the condition of Syria in early times; the story of the Khalîfa of Athribis and the monk (see page 96) is Egyptian in every particular; the story of the Cannibal of Kemer (see page 83) is one which could only be written, at least in its present form, in a barbarous country, bordering on the Sûdân; and the story of the two dyers (see page 60) is such a true picture of Muḥammadan trickery that it can hardly have been written in Europe. The story of the wounded Greek (see page 48) is one of considerable interest, for it introduces the use of a magical figure made of wax. It seems that a Greek was wounded in the eye by an arrow, and that because his friends could not carry him to the shrine of the Virgin, they carried a wax figure in his stead. The wax figure was, of course, made to resemble the Greek, and a dart was stuck in one eye; the Virgin drew the dart from the eye of the wax figure, and immediately the eye of the Greek, who was some considerable distance away, became sound and well. The story of the Monk and his skull-cap (see page 75) is of course the product of some monastery; but it is hard to account for that of the Virgin and the thirsty dog (see page 95). In the story of the Virgin Mary and the three Arabs (see page 40) we have, probably, a reminiscence of the stories in which the Virgin appears to those who are in danger on the sea[1], and brings them safely to land. For the story of the removal of a monastery from its old site to that of the bank of a stream[2] (see page 44), and that of the three poor sisters (see page 52), I have been able to find neither parallel nor equivalent.

[1] Compare HEROLT, Promptuarium, No. 674, p. 877; and No. 675, p. 878. See also my History of the Blessed Virgin Mary, p. 153 (translation).

[2] The reader should note that the word Jericho is a mistranslation for "stream", or "river", (the Ethiopic ጅፈፅ: = the Syriac ܢܗܪܐ), and for "Jericho" should read "stream" everywhere in the miracle.

An examination of the group of Ethiopic miracles of the Virgin Mary here given proves that the examples were chosen unsystematically, and that the chief object of the scribe was to put before the reader a selection which would fairly well illustrate all the principal varieties of miracles. The moral tone of all the miracles save one is very high, and their contents appeal to the best instincts and emotions of men and women; but it is as hard to see what useful purpose is served by repeating the story of the Unchaste Abbess of Mount Carmel (see page 68), as it is to understand how the scandalous story of the Provost of Aqualeia[1] and the Monk could ever have been incorporated into a collection of miracles. The editor of the group would probably quiet his scruples by thinking that narratives of human depravity which also displayed the saving power of God, and His longsuffering towards the erring, could not be out of place in works of the kind. The matter of the credibility of the miracles is one which need not concern us, for the measure of acceptance given to them must always have depended upon the education and constitution of the readers. It is interesting to note that most of the miracles, of which versions can be found in Latin and other texts, are of very respectable antiquity, and that in some cases they are as old as the VIIth or VIIIth century. An excellent example of this class is the story of the alb which the Virgin gave to one of her chosen followers. According to one version the recipient was Saint Bonet, Bishop of Auvergne, A.D. 689—699, but according to another it was Hildefonsus of Toledo[2], who died A.D. 783.

Throughout the Miracles the Virgin Mary is called the "two-fold Virgin", but nowhere in them is the title explained. It may be that the Ethiopians attributed to Mary a two-fold nature, one human and one divine, and that they, in consequence, ascribed to her a two-fold virginity. Or the appellation may refer to her own virginity and to that of her mother, who conceived her immaculately. At the end of most of the miracle a five-lined verse of poetry is added in which reference is made to the exalted character of the descent of the Virgin Mary, and a prayer is added on behalf of the man or woman who paid the scribe to copy the book. These verses are substantially the same in all manuscripts, and thus it is clear that at an early period they became an integral portion of collections of miracles. Among the epithets applied to the Virgin are, "Book of the Law and Covenant", the "Shining East", "Morning", "Sweet-tasting vine-cluster", "Life of the sick", Fountain of help", "Bloom of every flower", "Queen of heaven", "Sanctuary of the Law", "Evangelist", "Abode of the Paraclete", "Ark of God", "Pearl", "Flower of Ḥ annâ", "Covenant of God", "Covenant of mercy", "Shining bow in the cloud", "Zion of God", "Ark of the Law", "Pillar of cloud", "Ark and Two Tables of stone of the New Covenant", etc.

Of the miscellaneous compositions added in the Lady Meux MSS. Nos. 2 and 3 the vision of Archbishop Theophilus, or Philotheus (see page 114), is the most noteworthy. In it the Virgin appears to the Archbishop in the church at Ḳučsḳuâm and relates to him a tolerably full account of the birth of Christ, and of her wanderings through Egypt with the Child. This apocryphal work is one of many which are attributed to Theophilus, and it is interesting because it contains a number of details of the Infancy which are not to be found in the ordinary Apocryphal Gospels. It appears to have been written several centuries after the greater number of the miracles here given, and to have been intended to supply pious but credulous readers with stories about events in the life of Christ which were of a devotional rather than historical character. The Ethiopic text seems to have been made from an Arabic version, which was probably not older than the XIIth century. The two versions of the "Transitus" or "Assumption of the Virgin" (see pp. 15, 145) also seem to have been translated from the Arabic, and in many details they resemble the Syriac version[1]. The "Covenant of Christ with the Virgin" (see page 19), and the narrative of the five sorrows of Mary are attributed to Dexius, who may be identified with Bishop Bonet or Hildefonsus, and may be early works. The Latin version printed by HEROLT (Promptuarium, p. 860) is useful for purposes of comparison, and I append it here. It reads:— Quidam sanctus Pater in spiritu audivit Jesum Christum quaerentem a Matre misericordiae: qui fuissent dolores sui majores in mundo? Et illa: quinque fuerunt majores caeteris. Primus cum Simeon te occidendum prophetavit: Secundus fuit, cum te perdidi per triduum: Tertius, cum te ligatum audivi: Quartus, cum te Crucifixum vidi: Quintus, cum te vidi poni in sepulchro. Cui Christus ait: Qui me ad primum tuum dolorem cum uno Pater noster et Ave, Maria salutaverit, dabo ei cognitionem, et contributionem peccatorum. Si ad secundum idem fecerit, dabo ei remissionem omnium peccatorum. Si ad tertium idem fecerit, virtutes quas per peccatum perdidit, dabo. Et ad quartum dabo ei donum gratiae, et cibabo eum ante mortem Corpore meo. Si ad quintum, apparebo eo in monte, et recipiam eum in vitam aeternam.

THE HISTORY OF HANNÂ, THE MOTHER OF THE VIRGIN MARY.

The manuscript which contains this remarkable work is, apparently, unique, and is of considerable interest both artistically and linguistically. The work itself is of an unusual character, and its origin is difficult to trace. Much of the information contained in it is derived from the well-known Apocryphal Gospels which deal with the birth and history of the Virgin and Child, but there is much in it which is peculiar to itself. The composition is divided into seven sections, which were intended to be read one each day for a week, but no directions are given as to the week which is to be chosen for the purpose. The first section[1] mentions the parentage of Ḥannâ, or Saint Anne, who was of noble birth, and whose mother's name was Faustina[2], and describes her good works; she fed and clothed the poor, and made garments of byssus and purple for her husband. In it we are told that the Virgin Mary was the offspring of the union of the seed which had been deposited in Adam when he was created by God, and had passed from body to body until it entered into that of Joachim, and of the spirit of life, which descended from heaven in the form of a white bird, and took up its abode in the body of Ḥannâ. In the second section Ḥannâ is declared to be more highly esteemed than precious stones, and her joy at the birth of Mary is described; her answers to the Jews, who treated Ḥannâ with contempt, are also given, and in a final paragraph her last illness and her death, which took place on November 7, are mentioned. In the third section we find an encomium on Ḥannâ, and a description of the grief of the Virgin Mary. In the fourth section are a hymn of praise to Ḥannâ and an account of her genealogy. According to this her father was called Mâṭâṭ, and was the son of Levi, the son of Mêlkâ, of the tribe of Judah. He had three daughters, who were called Mary, Sophia, and Ḥannâ, and these married and became the mothers of Salome, who was with the Virgin at the birth of Christ, Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist, and the Lady Mary respectively. These statements are followed by a version of the story of Hannâ's barrenness which seems to be based on the Protevangelium of James. In the fifth section we find an allusion to the five and a half days mentioned in the Book of Adam and Eve, a short account of the childhood of Mary, and the narrative of the vision of a certain holy man who saw Joachim and Hannâ standing before the throne of God, and entreating Him to shew mercy unto those who should celebrate their festival upon earth. In the sixth section the writer discusses the birth of the Virgin Mary once more, and in the seventh section and its preface are beatifications of Joachim and Ḥannâ, a miracle of Ḥannâ, a series of Salutations (Aves) to Ḥannâ, a miracle of Ḥannâ, and a miracle of Christ. Throughout the work Ḥannâ is assumed to have married once only, and to have had only one child — the Virgin Mary.[1]

[1] According to some writers Mary was born when Ḥannâ was thirty-six years old and Joachim forty-five years old; after the death of Joachim she married Cleophas, and after the death of Cleophas she married Salome. The whole subject is discussed in the Acta SS. for July, tom. VI., p. 216ff.

MAGICAL PRAYERS.

The Magical Prayers translated in the following pages belong to a class of Ethiopian literature of which little has been published, and they illustrate an interesting phase in the history of Christian religious belief in Ethiopia. They are written upon long, narrow strips of parchment sewn together, and were rolled up tightly and fastened by a parchment string to some part of the body, usually the arm or the neck; the greasy condition of many of them proves that they were worn next to the skin. A few were placed in skin or metal cases which were worn outside the dress as ornaments; sometimes the cases were fastened up, the amulet being thus placed out of the reach of the wearer, and sometimes they were left open so that he or she might take out the parchment and read from it when in trouble or difficulty. The Ethiopians, in common with all Eastern nations, always attached great importance to the possession of amulets, and they believed that devils and fiends were powerless to harm them as long as they wore them on their persons; their acceptance of Christianity in the early centuries of our era in nowise affected this belief. Outwardly they became Christians, and they built churches, and read the Christian Scriptures, and adopted Christian ceremonies and institutions, and proclaimed Christ to be the Son of God. Inwardly, however, they retained their belief in the power of evil spirits, and they never succeeded in freeing themselves from the fear of the attacks which the demons of the mountains, and the deserts, and the forests, and the earth, and the sea, and the sky, were able to make upon them. Only in one way could they successfully resist them, and that was by making devil fight against devil, and fiend against fiend. To resist one devil a man must obtain the protection of another who had greater power; and to control or to avoid the attacks of a legion of devils, he must obtain influence with their prince. Such influence could best be obtained by knowing the names of the princes of darkness, and to such knowledge great importance was attached. The Ethiopians also believed that if a man's name perished he could have neither lot nor portion in the world to come; hence all amulets contain the names of men and women who sought to place themselves under the protection of supernatural beings. A man must be, so to speak, introduced by name to the invisible power or powers whose help and protection he sought, and for any petition to such to be effectual it must contain the name of the power or powers. Before the advent of Christianity in Ethiopia it was believed that human beings could compel supernatural beings or powers to do what they willed by addressing them by their names, but when the Ethiopians adopted Christianity this view became modified somewhat, and they sought to control the powers of darkness by means of the names of the Jewish Archangels and Angels, which they believed to be of greater might than those of their native demons and spirits. In the one case they sought to threaten or coax the demons because they knew their names, in the other they attempted to vanquish them by the knowledge of names of greater power. And demons of inferior power avoided any place where the name of any being of greater power was either mentioned or written, as we see from the story of the demon Ursula and Sûsenyôs who swore by the Archangels that she would never enter the church wherein the name of Socinius was being commemorated, or approach any place where it was to be found. In fact wherever the name of a good or evil spirit, or of a man existed, there also was the presence of that spirit or man; in this aspect the presence of the name of any being was equivalent to the presence of the being.

When God wished to give Solomon, the great magician of antiquity, power over the "children of Kedar", who are said to have been "workers in metal", and cannibals, and eaters of filth, He gave him a number of His own names whereby to adjure them. With these names Solomon destroyed their power, and because he was able to do so the Ethiopians thought that they also could protect themselves against the "children of Kedar" by the same means. It is worthy of note in passing that the knowledge of working in metals has at various periods of the world's history been associated with magical powers, for ignorant people in many countries have believed that metal could only be made to melt by the agency of devils. Ethiopian amulets contain large numbers of magical names, many of which can be traced to Bible sources, but many are clearly corruptions of names and are no longer recognizable. These names are usually arranged in groups of three or more, and many have to be repeated three, four, or seven times. The number three has, probably, reference to the Persons of the Trinity, the number four to the four cardinal points, or divisions of the earth, and the number seven to the seven souls of man. Magical prayers are usually directed against the influence of the evil spirits which were, and are, believed to cause sickness and disease, and although it is not possible to identify all the diseases enumerated it is clear that they are those which are commonly met with in Egypt, Ethiopia, and North-East Africa to this day. Skin diseases caused by dirt and want of sufficient and proper nourishment, internal diseases caused by drinking polluted water and eating insufficiently cooked food, fever of various kinds, ague, rheumatism, cholera, epilepsy, ophthalmia, worms, fistula, and diseases of the pulmonary organs are among the most common afflictions met with, and women always pray fervently against miscarriage and barrenness.

It is not clear by what means hostile supernatural beings were believed to effect their sinister ends in human beings, but it seems that they did so by merely looking upon the man, woman, or child who came in their way. Each sickness or disease was personified, and given a name, and the Ethiopian seems to have thought that when he was suffering from any ailment his pains arose from the actual presence of the personification of the disease in his body. To prevent the entrance of any such into his body was his chief aim and care, and he spared no pains in avoiding places where the demons of sickness were supposed to dwell. Mountains, deserts, woods, forests, caves, holes in the ground, ruins, old houses, and the like were supposed to be the favourite haunts of demons, and special care was thought to be necessary in latrines. In these last demons were thought to lurk waiting their opportunity to pass into the uncovered bodies of those who came there. When once a demon had entered the body he could only be expelled by means of the name, or presence, of a being of greater power. Magical names were thought to be efficacious in warding off the attacks of wild animals and reptiles, for these creatures were also held to be personifications of demons of evil. But besides demons and wild animals the magical powers of the people of certain nations had to be guarded against, and as a result we find in amulets prayers which are directed against the sorceries and spells of the Indians, Egyptians, Arabs, Greeks, Ethiopians, etc. In short, the world, according to the Ethiopian's ideas, must have been filled with hostile beings, both material and immaterial, who were ever on the watch to do him an injury.

The amulet written for Za-Walda Ḥawâryât contains six sections. The first describes the conversation between Solomon and the children of Kedar, and contains a prayer directed against the sword, dagger, epilepsy and kindred diseases, wild animals and reptiles, and the spells of sorcerers of different nations. The second contains a prayer against the "spell of the bear and of noxious beasts", and the spells of the magicians and sorcerers who work evil by means of the juices of certain plants and instruments of various kinds. The third contains a prayer against the lion, panther, hyaena, and wolf, and refers to the four beasts which support the throne of God. The fourth contains a prayer against liars, slanderers, calumniators, and enemies of every kind, and those who would oppose the owner of the amulet in judgment. The fifth contains a prayer against terror or fright of every kind, and refers to the "seventy-seven lamps which were given to Enoch"; and the sixth declares that the man who wears this amulet on his breast shall be delivered from the spear of any who would attack him.

The amulet written for Sebḥat Le'ab contains nine sections. In the first reference is made to Enoch and Elijah; in the second the three and a half years' famine which Elijah brought upon the earth is mentioned; and in the third Nabal, the fool, who opposed David, and Uzza, who dared to look into the ark, are alluded to. The owner of the amulet prays that as God worked for the Patriarchs, and delivered them, even so He will deliver him from out of his troubles. The fourth section is a prayer directed against wounding by "spear, sword, bow, naphtha, stick, or stone". The fifth section records the magical names which God gave to Moses, and contains a prayer that He will cause the owner of the amulet to find favour in the sight of kings and governors, and that his words may be sweet like honey and sugar, and [savoury like] salt. The sixth section is a prayer directed against words of calumny, and the seventh is a prayer that the owner of the amulet may be delivered from Bâryâ and Bûdâ, the princes of sorcerers and of those who work magic, by the might of the piercing Word of God, and by the sharp sword of Michael, and by the names of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The eighth section contains a remarkable list of magical names, and the ninth is a concluding prayer for deliverance from the disease caused by worms, and a fourfold address to a being called Nâzer.

The amulet written for Shalâsê Tezâzû introduces us to an entirely different class of magical prayers, and the text may probably be more correctly described as a litany. It begins by mentioning the Names of the Three Persons of the Trinity, and then describes what follows as a prayer against the tongue of Bâryâ, and against the "tongues of men, both of those who are kinsfolk and those who are strangers", and against fever, rheumatism, and other diseases. The addresses are made to Christ under the name of Tamâ, and a number of events in His life are enumerated, such as His proceeding from the Father, His existence before all worlds, His two-fold birth, His flight to Dabra Ḳuĕsḳuâm near Thebes, His circumcision, His appearance in the Temple, His living in the house of Joseph for thirty years, His baptism, fasting, and temptation, His weeping at the grave of Lazarus, His humility, His Body and Blood, His priesthood, His buffeting, scourging, and crown of thorns, His sweat, His trial before Caiaphas and Pontius Pilate, His agony, cross, and crucifixion, His bearing of the cross, His pierced hands and feet, His mouth which drank wormwood and gall, His death, His descent into the place whereunto the "souls of Adam and Abel went down", His dead body, His grave, and His Resurrection. The amulet concludes with a prayer for deliverance from "the tongue of kinsfolk and of strangers".

TRANSLATIONS.

I. The Magical Prayers which were written for Za-Walda Ḥawâryât[1] and Tasfâ Mâryâm are found in a manuscript in the possession of the Rev. R. W. Fawkes. This document consists of three narrow strips of parchment measuring together 6 ft. 2 in. by 3½ in. The handwriting is bold and usually fairly good, and the manuscript probably belongs to the first half of the XVIIIth century. At the top is a Coptic cross, the arms of which are ornamented with scroll work; in the middle is a rectangular design which is divided into nine sections and enclosed within borders; at the end, which tapers somewhat, are two crosses with human eyes. All four ornaments are painted in red, yellow, and black. The texts read:—

1. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. [These are] the Names of our God (or Lord) which will deliver [a man, or the wearer of the roll] from the sword, and from the knife (or razor) which is brighter than the lightning(?). [These are] the Name of God and the hidden Names which He spake unto Solomon concerning the 'Aḳuĕyâsât and the children of Ḳĕdâr, who are workers in metal, and He declared them unto him so that he might bind them in fetters and carry them off. And by means of the three names he bound them in fetters, and destroyed their power, and brought them low. Then Solomon said unto them, "Declare ye unto me [the source of] your power, and "by what means ye devour the flesh of men, and draw the soul out [from the "body], and paralyse the hearts of men, and change a soul from one form into "another; tell me, I pray you, what are the magical arts [whereby] ye [do these "things?]" And they said unto him, "We have no magical arts whatsoever". Then Solomon said [unto them], "By Dayâbâwî, and by Nabalbâlâwî, and by Mabraḳ "Dâdâ, and by Ḳĕrbĕdâdâ, the hidden Names of God, declare ye unto me what "are your magical arts, and what is your power, and by what means ye devour "the flesh of men, and by what means ye drink the blood of the 'Aḳuĕyâsât and "of the children of Ḳĕdâr who are workers in metal and eaters of filth." [And they said unto him, "We have no magical arts whatsoever]". Then Solomon spake unto them, and poured out curses upon them, saying, "By Darḳâs, and by "Zarḳâ[s], and by Daḳâs, and by Admâs, the [hidden] Names of God, shall ye be "accursed, and your power shall be destroyed. And by 'Êêfḥam His Name, and by "'Alfâhamsa, and by Lêḳâs, and by B'alfâs Za'aênâwôs, His hidden Names, shall "ye be accursed." And by Yôsẓâ, and by 'Alfâzâ, and by Hêzâ, and this Thy Name, he bound in fetters the 'Aḳuĕyâsât who devour human flesh without first slaying [the men]. Now at that time, which was the seventh, the 'Aḳuĕyâsât held converse with Solomon, and they said unto him, "We devour human flesh "without first killing [the men], and we drink [their] blood without [pouring it into] "a cup, and we drive out unborn children from women, for we are able to look "inside their wombs, and we make men and women to appear in other forms, "and we stir up enmity between man and wife." Thus did they speak unto Solomon at that time. Then Solomon said, "Deliver me, O Lord, from infirmities, "and from every thing [like unto them], and from epilepsy and from the diseases "which are like unto them, and from wrath and anger, and from what resembleth "them; and from the hyaena, and from the panther, and from the tiger, and from "the dragon, and from the serpent, and from snakes, and from the scorpion, and "from scorpions, and from creatures which are like unto them; and from saḥaḳ, "and ḳaḥar, and from what resembleth them. Let the heavens look upon them [in anger], and the earth spurn them, and the ark smite them, and the dust scatter "them, for what they do by magical arts, and let the earth quake and swallow "up those who make themselves masters of their sorceries". O loose the spell of the man of Guôndar and Lastâ. O loose the spell of the Amḫarâ and Wagrâ. O loose the spell of Dâmô and Dâmôt. O loose the spell of Ararâ and Wayrât. O loose the spell of Dâba'â and Ṣagû'â. O loose the spell of Manbaratâ and Gar'altâ. O loose the spell of Henṭâlô and Ṣalâlô. O loose the spell from Thy servant Za-Walda Ḥawâryât! [Here follows the rectangular design enclosed within borders].

2. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. O loose the spell of the bear and of the noxious beast. O loose the spell of the Gâla, and the Negro, and the Bălăwă and the 'Agăwă. O loose the spell of the Xîrê and Tegre. O loose the spell of Ḳuĕhyan and Walḳâyat. O loose the spell of Dâbtarâ and Faḳûrâ. O loose the spell of 'Aṣbî and Xîn'apê. O loose the spell of Xîrkûxa. O loose the spell of Gôrabît (or Sârabît). O loose the spell of 'Agamê and 'Agû'ĕda. O loose the spell of Harâmât and Warâhôt. O loose the spell of 'Ĕglâ and Yabân. O loose the spell of Gûlâmâkâd. O loose the spell of Sara'ê and Sam'â. O loose the spell of Sarâvê and Ḥamâxên. O loose the spell of India and Kêtânyâ (or Bêtânyâ). O loose the spell of Ethiopia and Malakî. O loose the spell of the sorcerer and sorceress and the [doer of their] work. O loose the spell of Afraje and Sĕryâ. O loose the spell of the Arab, and Egyptian, and Greek. O loose the spell of the devils and fiends. O loose the spell of the Ḥasîrân and the Nawiḥân. O loose the spell of the Ṣâlîmân (i. e., the black) and the Ḥawîhan. O loose the spells of all those who perform cures, and the spells of every kind which are cast by means of the plants maṣleḳuat, and 'ar'ar, and ṭĕḳûr kalb, and ṭĕḳûr xinbarâ, and ṭĕḳûr gabas, and the spells of those who work magic by means of instruments of various kinds outside and inside, and let not healing be performed by means of any of these things upon Thine handmaiden, Tasfâ Mâryâm.

3. In [the Name of] God the Father. Fire! In [the Name of] God the Son. Fire! In [the Name of] God the Holy Ghost. Fire! I have sealed you, and I have bound you, O lion, and panther, and hyaena, and wolf, and jackal, and vulture, both openly and in secret. O 'Adnâêl! O 'Aûdûêl! O invisible throne of God, the Most High! O Strength of the four and twenty priests of heaven! O ye four beasts which bear up His throne..... the throne of the Most High, ye [four beasts] who bear up the throne of the Most High upon their bodies, one having the face of a lion, and another the face of an eagle, and another the face of a man, and another the face of an ox! By these names I.. you that ye neither devour, nor bite, nor rend the possessions of your servants Za-Walda Ḥawâryât and Tasfâ Mâryâm, by the command of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. [Here follows the design of a cross with human eyes].

4. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, One God. The [above] names shall enable a man to guard himself against evil men, and liars, and calumniators, and men of wrath, and the hand of him that would attack him, and the feet of those who would rush upon him by means of magical powers. Let not those who would speak against this man words of hostility, or words of magical power, or those who would beat him with a rod, and with bitter words, draw nigh unto him at any time whatsoever, and let them not approach me, and let them not slay either the soul or the body of me, Thy servant, Za-Walda Ḥawâryât..... And deliver me from the man of incantations and sorcery, and set me at the head of the people, and grant graciously that they may not set themselves in opposition to me in the time of judgment, and deliver me from the attack of the enemy, and from hostile folk, and from him that lieth in wait to despoil me on the highway, and let them not draw nigh unto Za-Walda Ḥawâryât, [and] Walatta[1] Gabriel "Baratâwît".

5. The terror of the destroyer, the terror of the destroyer, the terror of the destroyer, the terror of the lynx (or bear), the terror of the lion, the terror of the

panther, the terror of him that maketh afraid, the terror of him that striketh terror, the terror of the dragon, the terror of the king, the terror of the bishop, the terror of the governors, the terror of Yârêd, and [the terror of] their soul, may the judges and the magistrates set under my feet, and may they bow down in homage [unto me]. As the seventy-seven lamps of heaven were given unto Enoch, the son of Yared, even so give Thou unto me love, and rectitude, and grace of voice (or speech) unto Thy servant Za-Walda Ḥawâryât. [Here follows the design of a second cross with human eyes.]

6. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers[1]: the snare is "broken, and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of the Lord [Who made "heaven and earth]". If any man wisheth to thrust a spear into thee, and thou repeatest these names, his spear shall be turned back; and if thou wilt not utter them firmly with thy voice, but dost wear them upon thy breast, they shall deliver thee from thine enemy, and thou shalt escape [from him] by the will of God. If any man wisheth to thrust a spear into thee, and thou repeatest these names, his spear shall be turned back; and if thou wilt not utter them firmly with thy voice, but dost wear them upon thy breast, they shall deliver thee from thine enemy, and thou shalt escape [from him] by the will of God. Even so deliver me, Thy servant, Za-Walda Ḥawâryât.

II. The Magical Prayers that were written for Sebḥat Le'ab are found in Brit. Mus. MS. 18, 996, which consists of two narrow strips of parchment measuring together 5 ft. 4½ in. by 2¾ in. The handwriting is fairly good, and the document probably belongs to the XVIIIth century. At the top is a rude figure of Saint Michael, who holds a drawn sword in his right hand and a dagger in his left; the handle of each weapon terminates in a cross. In the middle is a cross-shaped object with pendent ornaments, and where one portion rests on the other are the two eyes and nose of a human face; at the end of the document is a cross. The text is full of words to the meaning of which I have no clue,

and I have, therefore, thought it better to summarize some of its contents rather than to attempt to translate the whole of it. The text reads:—

1. Names of awe and terror unto men. Wenâêl, and Wenâêl, and Mash-wernâêl. O thou who takest away the strength, and who makest feeble, and who makest to be afraid, as thou didst hide Enoch and Elijah from the face of death, even so do thou hide me from the face of death, and [from] the wrath of the governors and judges, both male and female. And as thou didst shew thyself gracious unto Daniel [when he was] with the lions, even so do thou shew thyself gracious unto me, and make me to approach boldly unto the governors, and judges, and the chief, and the councillor, and man, and woman, and let them give unto me the desire of my mind, me thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

2. Dîdîḳôn, Alêf, Dîdîḳôn, Dîdîḳôn, Dalken! As Elijah put a bridle on the heavens for three years and six months by means of those names, even so do thou set a bridle upon the mouths and tongues and make feeble the power of mine enemy and of those who hate me, so that they may not speak against me words of shameful lies and disgrace, and without love and peace of me, thy servant, Sebḥat Le'ab.

3. Matêḳêxâ, Kêfêmôn, Kêfîdêgen. By means of these names let the people and the nations tremble when they see me, and let them not speak [against] me thy servant, Sebḥat Le'ab. And as Nâbâl was smitten with terror when David arrived with his soldiers, even so let mine enemy and those who hate me tremble when they see thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. And as Uzza was smitten with terror when he touched the ark of Zion, even so let the people, and the nations, and mine enemy, and those who hate me, tremble when they see me, and let them not speak [against] me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

4. By Seḳâ, Sêḳâ, Ṭâḳâ, by Alaḳâ, and Ṭabaḳâ, bury thou the hearts and seize and carry away the minds of mine enemy and of those who hate me, Semûn, Bûkmûn, Fayâkûn, Fayâkûmân, reduce the strength utterly, bring to nought the power, and terrify mine enemy and those who hate me, so that they may never be able to touch either my soul or my body with spear, or sword, or bow, or naphtha, or stick, or stone. O deliver me, and hide me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

5. The names which God Almighty gave unto the man Moses. Safarṭes, Anôrôs, Desêmûn, Masfen. In thy name Serôs I take refuge. Let my face shine like the Sun and like the Moon before kings and governors. Let my speech be sweet like honey and sugar, and [seasonable like] salt, and especially in the city of the Nagâxi Sea. O Germâged, Germâged, Germâṣyô, who makest to be afraid and who makest to be in terror, by the voice of wrath which goeth forth from Israel into my spirit, let the devils tremble, and fall down, and be driven away from thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O thou of the thousand names which are like unto the name of Christ, grant thou graciously unto me the desire of my mind when tribulation seizeth me as I stand before kings. Ra'eslâya, Salalâya, Kôlalâya, as ye did stablish the heavens, even so do ye make weak kings and governors, and male and female, so that they may love me and may set me like rings upon their fingers and like seals upon their arms. O Akder, and Aḳder, and Ṭerṭerâs who....., who descend from the land of the aether, as ye shewed yourselves loving unto the names of all those [who love you], even so let be regarded lovingly by kings and governors the name of me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Nemderôs, Kemderôs, Guôgûsh, who make to go out the heart of kings, close up [as] with a key the heart of my enemy, and may the.... of his way be blotted out. Safôlḳâêl Emmanuel are thy names. [Here follows a figure in the form of a cross.]

6. By the might of these thy names let me fetter the tongues of mine enemies which speak, and let them not declare words of calumny, without love and peace, concerning thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Barhânâel, let thy light enshroud me like a shadow and stablish it in the heart of me thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Xarbûr Dôr, who didst make the heart of Moses to be enlightened, even so do thou lighten the eyes of the heart of me thy servant.

7. [In] the Name of God the Father. [In] the Name of God the Son. [In] the Name of [God] the Holy Spirit. Abyater, Tâ'âs, Ozyâ[s], and Melîkîyâs, Aḳsâfer. [In] the name of Ḥarâxên, Ḥarâxûn, Ḥarâfeker, Ṭaṭajîn, Zaḥajûn, Ḥeflemâêl. In the name of Dôr, Alâdôr, Nât, Dânât, Rôdôs, Tâ'âs, Absâter of hosts, Ḥefrerwâḳ, Ḥefrerwâḳ, Ḥefrerwâḳ. By these names, and by thy piercing word, and by the sharp sword of Michael may be cursed . . . .; by these names and by Thy Word, Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, and the Son of Mary the Virgin, and by the sword of Michael may the unclean spirit be driven away and cut down. And wheresoever this prayer may come may it drive out and expel Bûdâ and Bâryâ from the man whom they have seized, and may it set free the servant of God, Sebḥat Le'ab, from the [evil] work of man and from magic.

8. Alfâ, Alfâ, Alfâ! Get thee out! And when thou hast gone out thou shalt not return, saith God, and the memorial of thy name shall perish for ever and for ever. Amen. Yâḳua, and Yâḳî. O Thou Bûdâ, and thou Bâryâ! Thou Gânên, and thou Satan, and thou Pêrâ, and thou Nadâd, who take upon yourselves multitudes of forms! O Ahyâ Xîrâhyâ Yamrâêl, thou mighty one, God Almighty, Adonai, the Holy One, Thou Holy Spirit, Xuḥalâ, the son of One, Balofḥam, Bamyôn, I speak unto you. Iyâel, extinguisheth the fire of the Lord God. Ĕrûḥal, Ĕrûḥal, Ĕrûḥal, Samtâêl, Pelmâêl, Yaxakût, Gadên, Pillar of light, garment of light, shine brightly before the face of the mighty one, the foe of Bâryâ, Pelmâ, and shew me the power and awe of the king of glory, Pêmâ. Let him neither appear unto nor touch the soul of thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. [Here follows a cross.]

9. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. Nâzer, Nâzer, Nâzer, Nâzer, four [times] Azerzer. These are the magical [names] of healing which shall be performed for Thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. Admetĕrôs, Gâyaṣṭô, Batuʿag! Let deliverance from the disease caused by worms be given to Thy servant Sebhat Le'ab.

III. The Magical Prayers that were written for Gabra Shelâsê Tezâzû are found in Brit. Mus. Oriental 4,716, which consists of two long, narrow strips of parchment measuring together 4 ft. 7½ in. by 2¾ in. The handwriting is peculiar, and, though apparently plain, is difficult to make out in many places; the document probably belongs to the last half of the XVIIIth century. At the top are two human figures, one being probably that of a bishop, and the other a member of the laity; they are painted in red, brown, black, and yellow colours. In the middle is another painted scene in which a priest is addressing a cock-headed demon or deity. The text, which is addressed to a being called Tamâ, reads:—

In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, One God. A prayer against the tongue, and the tongue of Bâryâ, and of men — both those who are kinsfolk and those who are strangers — [and against] fever, and rheumatism, and inflammation of the lungs, and bowels, and diarrhoea, and dysentery, and cholera. Behold, I take refuge in the exaltation of thy name, and in thy pre-eminence which was in the beginning, [and is expressed by] the letter alêph, so that Thou mayest deliver me, O Christ, from the insurrection of the tongue and mouth, for the tongue slew the company of the martyrs in thousands; one word of calumny is mightier than the sharpest sword. [Deliver me, O] TAMÂ, by Thy going forth from the company of the Father and His Son, and by Thy state of being which was before all worlds. And moreover, I would that Thou didst deliver me, O Christ, from the ambush (or wiles) of the tongue, the persecutor of Daniel, whom Thou didst deliver from Nebuchadnezzar, the wicked one, when the people were moved and cast him into the blazing fire. O TAMÂ, by Thy bodily form which sprang from the seed of the fathers who succeeded each other, and from the Holy Spirit, and which was more beautiful than the forms of the children of men who are beautiful, deliver Thou me, O Christ God, the Son of His substance, from the unjust tongue, which consumeth injustice for its food, for the tongue slayeth and maketh alive. O TAMÂ, by Thy two-fold birth, the one being of the Father, and divine, and the other of man, [I entreat Thee], O Christ, Thou God Who art alive and not dead, to deliver me from the tongue of man and from mine own tongue, for death is strong and cruel. O TAMÂ, because Thou wast wrapped in poor and miserable swaddling-bands, and again, because Thou didst lie in the stall whilst the ox looked on, deliver me, O Christ, from littleness of the tongue; for there is another worm to me through speech, and let not terror at the cutting down of great trees overwhelm me, for it is the axe. O TAMÂ, by Thy persecution, and by Thy rapid flight to Dabra Ḳuĕsḳuâm during the slaughter of the children of [Thy] native country, deliver me, O Christ, from the service (?) of the tongue, by which alone we can be free, for I have lived (?) fifty years without turning aside therefrom. O TAMÂ, by Thy circumcision, and by Thy standing naked before the people at Thy circumcision, [which took place] on the eighth day after Thy birth, give me counsel, O Christ, and deliver me from the ..... that I may flee from the tongue, for it terrifieth me greatly, and the whale which is joined therewith will thrust me forth. O TAMÂ, by Thy coming into the house of the sanctuary forty days after Thy birth, and Thy standing up before Thy true Father, deliver me, O Christ from the calumny of the tongue, which is outward, for the tongue of man slayeth .... O TAMÂ, by Thy return to the country of Nazareth from the land of Egypt, and by Thy rearing, and by Thy receiving of abundant rebukes in the house which was built by Joseph for a space of forty (sic) years, graciously deliver me, O Christ, from the evil tongue which slandereth its neighbour in secret and not openly. O TAMÂ, by Thy baptism, and by the voice of the Father, and by the Holy Spirit which descended upon Thy head from heaven, deliver me, O Christ, and save me wholly from the tongue of the men who outwardly speak words of peace, but whose hearts are full of guile. O TAMÂ, by Thy fasting, and by Thy temptation in the desert for forty days — for Thou hast taught me to fast, and hast been with me for these fifty years — deliver me from the rising up of the feeble tongue which breaketh the bones, and kindleth a fire which will burn for a hundred years. O TAMÂ, by Thy journeyings when Thou wast in the world, and by Thine appearance as preacher of the Gospel for three years before Thy death, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the man who listeneth with deceit, being openly a friend, but from whom there cometh envy, for a viper is better than he. O TAMÂ, by Thy weeping, and by the tears which were on Thy face at the death of Thy beloved Lazarus in the presence of his companions who mourned him, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the man who is of no account, and from the mouth of Pharaoh, the devourer of the lowermost fire of Egypt, even as Thou didst deliver Jacob in the sea. O TAMÂ, by Thine exceedingly great humility when Thou didst wash alike the feet of Judas, the tare, and those of Peter, the wheat; O King of kings, Christ, Whose throne is in the heavens, purify me with Thy silver from the dross of the tongue of the evil man by means of the fire of repentance and not by water. O TAMÂ, by the bread of Thy body, and by the cup of Thy vivifying blood which Thou didst give unto Thy disciples on the first feast of unleavened bread, O Melchisedek Christ, Priest of the priesthood, take tithe [of me] being the son of Abraham and Levi, and deliver me from a false tongue [Here follows the second picture.] Deliver from the tongue of the man of Bâryâ and ... thy servant Gabra Shelâsê Tĕzâzû. O TAMÂ, by the smiting of Thy face, and by the blows upon Thy head which was enclosed with thorns, and by the unclean spittle which the Jews spat upon Thee, deliver me, O Christ, from this generation, and illumine my body and my spirit with Thy light ..... when I see the habitation which Thou hast received. O TAMÂ, by the sweat of Thy face which fell in drops like blood by reason of Thine exceedingly earnest prayer and worship in the hidden place in the desert, deliver me from the tongue which overthroweth, for the labour of the cross is mightier than all pain. O TAMÂ, by Thy being seized and bound, and by the coming out of men after Thee by night with knives and staves — now Thou wast alone and poor — deliver Thou me from the tongue which killeth souls, for it cometh upon me suddenly, and wageth war against me. O TAMÂ, by Thy going to Caiaphas and Hannâ, and again from Caiaphas [unto] the judge, for men came unto Thee by night with lamps, and torches, and lanterns, deliver me, O Christ, by Thy brotherly arms from the tongue of the man of savage heart and haughty mind. O TAMÂ, by Thy standing up before Pontius Pilate, and by Thy coming outside when they dressed Thee in a tunic, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the wicked.... for to his tongue was an evil reward, and Judas, the senseless man, became terror-stricken, and he hanged himself with a rope, and died. O TAMÂ, by Thy back, and by Thy patient endurance of the scourging when Thou wast wholly shrouded in great and severe tribulation, deliver me, O Christ, my Father, Who didst beget me without carnal intercourse, and grant unto me the gift of sonship, as long as the tongue can speak, for through Thee there shall be in the heavens a covering [for me]. O TAMÂ, by Thine abundant suffering, and by Thy prolonged agony..... deliver me, O Christ, from the sharp point of the tongue, and deliver me, O Thou who didst stand like a slave before Pilate the Greek, and didst bear the punishment with which thieves are punished. O TAMÂ, by Thy cross, and by Thy crucifixion, O Thou Who wast nailed between the two thieves, deliver me, O Christ, from the combat of Diabolos, and from his hosts, and from the counsel of the tongue of Caiaphas — now he was the high priest — and may the years of my body [not] come under his time of power. O TAMÂ, by Thy hands, and by the nails of death by which they were pierced, O fruit of the tree of error, a man in the place of that which was plucked by Eve, feed me, O Christ, with the tree of life for which I hope. The softness of speech in the heat of the sun drieth up; let not the speech of error which must be cut down go forth from me. O TAMÂ, by Thy feet whereon Thou didst walk about with the cross and the sharp nails to which the Jews fixed Thee, deliver me, O Christ, from the calumny of the

tongue especially, O Thou Who didst go to Golgotha bearing the heavy cross, and didst take upon Thyself the form of a servant, although Thou wast the Son [of God]. O TAMÂ, by Thy mother who was inflamed with the heat of tenderness for Thee when Thou wast on the cross, and who went with John unto the foot thereof, bring me out, O Christ, from the place of temptation and from the pit which children [of men] have dug for the tongue. O TAMÂ, by Thy mouth which drank wormwood and gall, and also by Thy tongue, for Thou hast taught me the wisdom of seven years when Thou wast on the cross, deliver me, O Christ, and defend me from the cursed tongue of a child who hateth [his] father. O TAMÂ, by the departure of Thy soul [from the body], and by Thy descent unto the place whereto the souls of Adam and Abel went down, even unto the sea of fire, lead me, O Christ, and guide me as Thou didst guide the ark of Noah unto Mount Ḳĕdû (Ḳardô?), and direct me and bring me into a safe haven; for the sea of fire seetheth and the waves thereof are boiling. O TAMÂ, by Thy violent death, the death of the wood of the cross, through the greatness of the unwonted hatred for Thee of [the Jews], who stirred themselves up against the Man because He was good, and were moved on behalf of another (i. e., Barabbas), deliver me, O Christ, from the ..... who are kinsfolk, for their tongues are coals, and their words flames of fire. O TAMÂ, by Thy dead body, and by the bringing down of the same from the cross by the men of Thy religion, the Gospel, Jesus Christ, Whom the Highest delivered by [His] arms, deliver me, and save me from the tongue of the mighty man, for it is a sharp knife, and not a member of the body. O TAMÂ, by Thy grave, which was the grave of a stranger and of a sojourner like unto that of Thy fathers, and was not like that of David, the royal son, deliver me, O Christ, from the evil tongue of the man that is like unto a man who hath a serpent within him, for Satan is a helper of him that is his son and heir. O TAMÂ, by Thy Resurrection, when the world shook by reason of Thy light, and the guardians of the sepulchres were terrified, and the dead bodies rose up, deliver, O Christ, the people of the world from the tongue. Unto Thee it belongeth to kiss him that slew Thee. Who is the man of the peace of Judas? O deliver from the tongue of kinsfolk and of stranger Thy servant Gabra Shalâsê Tezâzû.

THE INTRODUCTION TO LADY MEUX MANUSCRIPT NO. 2 (A).

IN[1] THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY SPIRIT, ONE GOD.

[Col. 1] We will declare unto you, O beloved brethren, ye children of this church, and may [God] make bright the eyes of your hearts to hear [them], the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, which [name] is in Hebrew MÂRÎHÂM, (a sweet name!) the life of the world, and the God-bearer, whose great praise and honour neither the beings of heaven nor the beings of earth will ever be able to bring to an end. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant[2] . . . . . for ever and ever!

Before the Miracles shall be read let the people hearken with the ear of understanding! Hear ye with your ears, and lay up in your hearts the majesty and the praise of our holy Lady, [Col. 2] the two-fold Virgin, MARY who is called in Hebrew MÂRÎHÂM,[3] that is to say MARY, the guide unto the kingdom of heaven. Our Lady MARY existed before the world [was created] in the mind of God. For the sake of MARY Adam and Eve were made, and Adam called his wife "Life" because he knew that MARY would go forth from his loins and from the womb of his wife. What book can contain the [story of the] majesty of MARY? For the sake of MARY the whole world was made. And if everything [concerning MARY] were to be written down the world would not be able to contain it. What ear could listen unto it? What tongue could declare it? What voice could declaim it? What brain could comprehend it? And what mind could [Col. 3] think it out and understand it? Nevertheless we will declare a little thereof unto you, in proportion as our Lady MARY shall shew compassion unto us.

[1] The following text is written on a leaf which has been inserted between foll. 1 and 2; it is, substantially, the text which is given in the manuscript B after the "Salutations" to the Virgin; see the Ethiopic text, pp. 5 and 6.

[2] The name is omitted. [3] See LUDOLF, Commentarius, pp. 346 and 350.

Now MARY was declared from Adam unto Abraham, and from Abraham unto Moses, and from Moses unto David, the son of Jesse; and our Lady MARY appeared under many forms. The generation of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, sprang from the house of David the king, and from the house of Aaron the priest, with reference to her mother; and the name of her father was Îyâḳêm[1] (Joachim), and the name of her who gave birth unto our Queen MARY was Ḥannâ. Unto whom hath the power to comprehend her state of virginity been given? The angels were unable to comprehend the state of virginity, for they transgressed through the lust of the flesh, and they went down to the earth in days of old.[2] Who is like unto our Lady MARY [Col. 4] who was the place of abode of the Father? And who is like unto our Lady MARY who became the habitation of the Son? And who is like unto our Lady MARY who became a house for the Holy Spirit? Can any man abide without sin? Nay, for no man hath carried fire [without being burned], and there is no one who hath not committed sin except our Lady MARY. Our Lady MARY is more pure than the angels. Our Lady MARY is greater than all the generations of women. The mind of our Lady MARY is wholly the mind of God. The character of our Lady MARY is the character of God. Our Lady MARY beckoned unto God with her purity. Our Lady MARY gave birth unto God with her virginity. Our Lady MARY became [Col. 5] a dwelling of joy unto God. Our Lady MARY spake by the Prophets. Our Lady MARY preached by the Apostles. Our Lady MARY giveth praise with the mouth of all creation. Honour ye our Lady MARY, O children of this church, for our Lady MARY is the redemption for sinners, and our Lady MARY giveth gracious gifts unto those who minister unto her with good service. Put your confidence in our Lady MARY with all your hearts, and have no doubt whatsoever but that it is she who bringeth you salvation. And prostrate ye yourselves before her image (or picture); for whosoever boweth not down before her his name shall be blotted out of existence, and the memorial of his name shall be unknown, and the angels [Col. 6] of heaven shall say, "Amen".

[2] This seems to be an allusion to Genesis vi. 2:—"the sons of God saw the daughters of men "that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose." In the Book of Adam and Eve (Malan's translation, p. 137), the "sons of God" are identified with the children of Seth, and the "daughters of men" with the descendants of Cain. The sons of Seth were warned by Enoch not to leave the holy mountain whereon they lived, but they rose up against him, and refused to hearken unto his words, and went down to the plain. "And when they looked at the daughters of Cain, at their beautiful figure, and "at their hands and feet dyed with colour, and tattooed in ornaments on their faces, the fire of sin was "kindled in them. Then Satan made them look most beautiful before the sons of Seth, as he also made "the sons of Seth appear of the fairest in the eyes of the daughters of Cain, so the daughters of Cain "lusted after the sons of Seth like ravenous beasts, and the sons of Seth after the daughters of Cain, until "they committed abomination with them."

THE INTRODUCTION TO LADY MEUX MANUSCRIPT NO. 3 (B).

[B fol. 2*a*. 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY SPIRIT, ONE GOD.

Here beginneth the book which shall be read before [the priests] recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY, that is to say, the Book of Rules that came forth from the throne of Mark the Apostle out of the Church of Mu'allaḳah[1] of Maṣr (i. e., Cairo) where the teachers, the honourable Archbishops who were the orthodox treasurers of the Mysteries, laid it up. Our Lady, the holy Virgin Mary, declared these rules unto them [at intervals] during a long period of time; unto some of them she spake in dreams, unto others she spake in visions, and unto others she spake openly. Now these men were Abbâ Abraham, and Abbâ Mark, and Abbâ Matthew, and they were the workers of wonderful things; and the story of their words was written down in the Book of the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin [B fol. 2*a*. 2] MARY, [telling] how she spake unto them, and how she wrought for them wonderful deeds and miracles. And this Book of their Rules was translated from the Arabic into the Gĕ'ĕz, [the language of] the country of Ethiopia, in the days of John, the Archbishop of Alexandria, and in the days of our Archbishops Abbâ Michael and Abbâ Gabriel,[2] and the Bishop Abbâ John, when they went forth into Ethiopia in the third year, in the days of our king Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb,[1] who was surnamed Constantine, after he had reigned seven years. And the Book of their Rules saith thus:—"On every Sunday, that is on every first "day of the week, and on every festival day of our Lady MARY, they "shall not fail to recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY in all the churches "[B fol. 2*b*. 1] with great honour and with great gladness, for MARY is "honourable, and beneath God Almighty there is no one who is more "honourable". And they anathematized [those who would not do this] so that [the priests] might not cease to recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY on every Sunday, that is, on every first day of the week, and on each of her days of festival.

[1] I. e., the famous church dedicated to the Virgin, more commonly known as "El-Mu'allaḳah," or the "hanging", from the fact that it is suspended between two bastions, and must be entered by a staircase. The church was probably founded in the VIth century of our era. "It is a double-aisled church, and as such is remarkable in having no transepts" (BUTLER, Coptic Churches, vol. 1. p. 208). In the list of the Churches of Cairo given by Ibn Dûḳmâḳ (ed. Vollers, Cairo, 1893, p. 1. v) the position of this church is thus described:—

Now her days of festival are these:—on the sixth day of Nuḥasê[2] they celebrate her Conception; from the sixteenth day [of Nuḥasê] to the twenty-first day, that is to say for six days, the festival of her Assumption similar to that which they celebrate for the Resurrection of her Son; on the tenth day of Maskarram, the coming of the Image of our Lady[3] into the city of Ṣêdênyâ,[4] the shrine of Marînâ—now this is the Image which put on flesh and from which drops of sweat fell; on the twenty-first day of Maskarram, and on the twenty-first day of Ṭĕḳemt, and on the sixth day of Ḥĕdâr, her advent into Dabra Ḳuesḳâm;[5] on the twenty-first day, the stablishing of the lamp; [B fol. 2*b*. 2] on the third day of Tâḫshâsh, her advent into the sanctuary (i. e., the Temple at Jerusalem); on the twenty-first day of the same month, and on the twenty-second day, [they] celebrate the commemoration of Bishop Dexius—now when he was keeping the festival on this day [the Lady Mary] gave him apparel which had not been made by the hand of man, and a throne whereon no other man had ever sat; on the twenty-eighth day of Tâḫshâsh, which is the festival Gênâ, and on the twenty-ninth day, her giving birth to our Redeemer; on the twenty-first day of Ṭêr, her death; on the sixteenth day of Yakâtît, her gift of the "Kîdâna Mĕḫrĕt",[1] and on the twenty-first day of this month her commemoration is also celebrated; on the twenty-first day of Magâbît, and on the twenty-ninth day also, her Conception of our Redeemer; on the twenty-first day of Mîyâzyâ and on the first day of Genbôt, her birth (now there are some who say that her birth took place on the tenth day of Maskarram, but we say what is certain about it, even as our Patriarchs have taught us).

[1] This king was the fourth son of David (he reigned from A. D. 1380 to A. D. 1409) and reigned thirty-four years and two months, i. e., from A. D. 1434 to A. D. 1468. Under his rule Ethiopian literature flourished, and Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb was himself an author; the "Miracles of the Virgin" was one of the many books which were translated from Arabic into Ethiopic during his reign. See BASSET, Études sur L'Histoire d'Éthiopie, Paris, 1882, pp. 102, 243—246; LUDOLF, Commentarius, p. 301—340; and the history of Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb and his son Baʿeda Mâryâm published and translated by PERRUCHON under the title, Les Chroniques Zarʿa Yâʿeqôb et de Baʿeda Mâryâm, Paris, 1893.

month. And they shall celebrate] a great festival on the twenty-fifth day because her Son planted dry rods and made them to become trees [B fol. 3*a*. 2]; and on the eighth day of the month Sanê because her Son made water to flow from the rock and healed those who were sick; and on the twentieth day of this month because the Apostles were assembled, and her Son came down to build her house; and on the twenty-first day [to commemorate] the sanctification of her house; and also on the twenty-first day of the month Ḥamlê. Now all the festivals of our Lady MARY are thirty-two in number.

And they shall honour these days of festival like the first day of the week (Sunday), and the people shall do no work of any kind whatsoever in them, from year to year and for ever as far as these festivals of our Lady, the holy Virgin Mary, are concerned. And those who do not come on every first day of the week to church to hear the Miracles of the Virgin, the Patriarchs whose names we have already mentioned above shall anathematize them whether they be male or whether they be female, except in such cases as when they are prevented from coming by sickness, or by some serious cause, or by some physical infirmity [B fol. 3*b*. 1], or some piece of work which preventeth a man from coming to church. Now every one who shall hear the reading of the Book of the Miracles of the Virgin, our Lady MARY the God-bearer shall bless, whether they be men or whether they be women, on these festivals of our Lady Mary. And on every first day of the week both men and women shall be gathered together in the church, and after the conclusion of the song of peace they shall put off their ornaments, that is, their ornaments of gold and silver, from their hands, and from their fingers, and from their necks, and from their ears, and from their heads; but the women must have their heads shorn even as Paul said.[1] And it is meet for them to compose their minds to listen unto the

[1] See 1. Corinthians xi. 6. Saint Paul's words are:—"For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered."

[reading of the] Miracles of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY; and there shall be great silence [B fol. 3*b*. 2] and no man shall speak. Whosoever is strong shall stand up to listen, and whosoever is weak shall sit down. And before they read the Miracles of our Lady MARY the Patriarch shall bless [the people]; and if there be no Patriarch there, the Metropolitan shall bless [them]; and if there be no Metropolitan there, the Bishop shall bless [them]; and if there be no Bishop there, the priest who is of the highest rank shall bless [them], on the East, and on the West, on the South, and on the North.

Then shall the Bishop or priest set the crown upon his head, and prostrate himself three times before the ark; and he shall offer up incense, and he shall cense [the place] three times, saying, "Glory and honour "be unto the Holy Trinity, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, "henceforth and for ever and ever! Amen." And he shall go to the Image of our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, and he shall cense [it] [B fol. 4*a*. 1] three times, and shall say, "Rejoice, O thou that art full "of grace, God is with thee! Blessed art thou among women, and bless- "ed is the fruit of thy womb. Do thou make supplication and intercede "with thy beloved Son, so that He may pardon unto us our sins." And if there be a Metropolitan there he shall then cense [the place] three times, and after him all the priests, according to their grades, shall do [likewise], until all those who have been appointed priests shall have finished the censing. And after this they shall read the Book of the Miracles of our Lady three at a time; those who know the Book shall each read three of the miracles from [the Book of] the Miracles of our Lady MARY, but those who are not able to read the Book in its integrity shall each read one of the lesser miracles, so that the blessing of the Virgin may not be destroyed. And during the reading three priests shall burn incense without ceasing; one towards the ark, and one towards the Image of our Lady MARY, and one towards the reader of the miracle [B fol. 4*a*. 2].

And let not any Christian imagine that it is a light matter to hear read the Miracles of our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, for it is a great and an honourable thing; and let neither man nor woman fail to listen unto them, lest they fall into carelessness. And he that is able to hear her Miracles let him take an offering on that day, provided that he is not prevented [from so doing] by some serious cause as we have already said. And he that is unable to take an offering when he heareth [the reading] of the Miracles shall go unto the church, and he himself shall be in the place of an offering, provided that he listeneth unto the Miracles in faith. And those who neglect (or treat with contempt) the Book of her Miracles, and the Covenant with our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, are outside the faith in the Incarnation of the Son of God, and cannot be numbered among the sheep of the fold of Christ. And they shall be under a ban, and excommunicated, and [B fol. 4*b*. 1] cut off by the swords of Peter and of Paul, and by the sword of the words of Abbâ Michael, and Abbâ Gabriel; and they shall be cut off and excommunicated by us also because we have received the power of these [saints], and therefore we can cut off and bind fast with a fetter which cannot be opened until her Son shall come in glory him that will not do honour unto the festivals of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, even as unto the first day of the week. Amen. But upon those who wish to honour, and to exalt, and to love her with all their hearts and with all their might shall dwell the prayer and the blessing of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, and they shall sanctify them for ever and ever and ever. Amen.

[B fol. 4*b*. 2] And the priests shall say twice in the tone [called] 'Azel,'[1] "Hallelujah! Hallelujah! We worship the Father of Light, and "His Only Son, and the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, three equal Persons."

[1] I. e., the tone used in the churches in Lent, and on fast days, and on the Eves of festivals, and for funeral ceremonies; see DILLMANN, Lexicon, col. 1002.

[Then shall they] say thrice, "Salutation unto MARY the Queen, the true "vine, on which, although it hath never been cultivated, thou shalt find "blessed fruit. The Son of God in truth came and became man from "her, and she gave birth unto Him and He hath saved us and hath par- "doned unto us our sins. Thou hast found grace, O Virgin. Many shall "hold converse concerning thy honour, for the Word of the Father came "and took upon Himself human nature from thee; Hallelujah! Come ye "and look upon this Bride, this Woman who is adorned, the mother of "the Lamb, who is enveloped in such great glory, even as saith the son "of thunder, John the pure virgin, who cried out, saying, 'He hath made "'this bride to shine exceedingly, yea, [B fol. 5*a*. 1] more than the star of "'the morning'. This is the New Zion, the city of our God, wherein "dwelleth the joy [of] all the holy prophets."

"Rejoice thou, O MARY, in the pleasure of its passover"; and thou shalt recite this passage unto the end thereof in the tone [called] 'Azel. Then shall they read the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, each man [reading] three at a time. And after the reading of the Miracles they shall all sing a hymn together, and shall say thus:—"Blessings be upon this our Lady, the holy MARY, who gave "birth to our Salvation! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! upon all of "us, the people [here]. Unto Thy Cross, O Lord, we will ascribe glory; "Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Salutation unto thee, O John, the "son of thunder (Boanerges). Salutation unto thee, O John, who didst "write the Apocalypse. Salutation unto thee, O John Theologos. Salut- "ation unto thee, O John, the beloved of the Lord. [B fol. 5*a*. 2] Salut- "ation unto thee, O John, the virgin. Salutation unto thee, O John the "Evangelist. Salutation unto thee, O John, who didst lie in the bosom "of God. Salutation unto you, O Peter, and Paul, and James, and John, "and Andrew, and Matthew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Thomas, "and James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddeus, and Nathaniel, and

"Matthias, and Luke, and Mark, and James the Bishop. Bless ye us, "your children by the command of the Spirit.

"Salutation unto thee, MARY, thou Door of the East, which brought "forth the Light. Salutation unto thee, thou Vine of Eskêdêrê. Salutation "unto thee, thou Splendour that can be seen. Salutation unto thee, O "thou that art ornamented with rays of light (?). Salutation unto thee, for "thou hast given birth unto the Creator. Salutation unto thee, thou Rod "of Aaron which bore fruit. Salutation unto thee whom we worship with "a psalm. Let each one read [B fol. 5*b*. 1] the Book of thy Miracles in "peace! Bless thou us!

THE ADDRESS OF THE READER OF THE MIRACLES OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY TO THE CONGREGATION.

Hear, O ye my fathers, and my brethren, and my sisters, who are in this church hoping to hear the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin, the two-fold MARY, who gave birth unto God, and let those who are upon high seats come down, and do ye who are seated rise and stand up; and gird about you your apparel [B fol. 6*b*. 2], let down coverings of your heads and [put off from] you your ornaments. Have ye not heard that it is said, "If a man be able to offer up an offering [let him do so], and

"if he cannot, let him hearken unto the Miracles of the Lady of us all, "MARY, who gave birth unto God, and it shall be unto him for an offer- "ing; and our Lady shall love him that listeneth thereunto, and she will "bless quickly him that prayeth and listeneth with all his heart." Do ye then stand up and make yourselves worthy to receive your reward for ever and ever. Amen.

Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou Mother of our Lord Jesus Christ! When the Book of thy Miracles is being read overshadow [us] with thy wings. Whatsoever words thereof we hear make thou to put forth roots, and make the stalk and branches to grow up, and make them to bring forth fruit thirtyfold, and sixtyfold, and an hundredfold. And daily do thou make intercession on our behalf, and according to the power which hath been given [B fol. 7*a*. 1] unto thee by the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit make thou our sins to be lightly esteemed. Depart not thou from us in this world, and in that which is to come let not our soul separate itself from thy soul, for ever and ever! Amen.

O my Lady, thou Mother of salvation, Mother of light, Mother of incense, Mother of offering, Mother of fire, thou only Mother, Mother of the King, Mother of Christ the Messiah, O Mother divine and awe-inspiring through the compassion of thy Son, look thou [favourably] upon our supplication, and be thou graciously pleased with our entreaties, and by thy prayer do thou cool the wrath of thy Son! Amen. May the Jews who are doomed to perdition and whose name exciteth to wrath go down and have their habitation in the lowermost depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the wicked Jews who wish not [to hear] thy name and who deny thy virginity be mown down by the sword of Michael, may they be burnt in the torment of fire, and may they descend and have their habitation [B fol. 7*a*. 2] in the lowermost depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the lying Jews who hold thy virginity in abomination be fettered and bound in chains of fire, and may they dwell [in the lowermost depths] of the place of judgment and corruption! Amen. May the evil-doing Jews who curse thy virginity be cut down by the sword of Michael, may they suffer pain in the torture of the fire, and may they be sealed down in the depths of the place of judgment whence there is no place of escape! Amen. May the leprous and filthy Jews who blaspheme thy virginity be punished by the hand of Michael, may they become involved in the Gehenna of fire, and may they be hurled down headlong and cast into the depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the faces of those who follow Christ, and who follow the Gospel, and who read thy miracles, be clothed by the light of thy grace, and may they be preserved by thy covenant! Amen. May those blessed and good men who esteem holy thy virginity, and those who take refuge at thine image clothe themselves in the light of thy grace! May they be permitted by grace to enter into thy bridal chamber, may they be [B fol. 7*b*. 1] sanctified by the Blood of thy Son, may they inherit life and may they have as their lot a portion and an inheritance with the saints! Amen. And may the holy, and the elect, and the pure who sing praises unto thy virginity, and who cry out before thine image, array themselves in the light of thy grace, and may they exult and rejoice in the bridal chamber of thy Son! [Amen].

I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou couch of the heavenly Bridegroom. I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou chariot of the Sun of righteousness. I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, even as John of the golden mouth (Chrysostom) gave praise unto thee, saying, "In the sweetness of his lips rejoice thou, O my Lady MARY, for of thee "God the Word became incarnate, and He went forth from thee [B fol. 7*b*. 2] "like a bridegroom who goeth forth from his chamber. Rejoice, O my "Lady MARY, because there went forth from thee the truly Good Shepherd, "Who seeketh for the lamb which hath been cast away, and when He "hath found it He beareth it upon His shoulders. Rejoice, O my Lady

"MARY, for through thee have been broken the fetters of the monster which "causeth suffering, and which God did cast into judgment. Rejoice, O "my Lady MARY, thou holy land, whereunto God came riding upon a "cloud of light and entered into thee. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, from "whom God, Who maketh His saints to rest, appeared. Rejoice, O my "Lady MARY, in whom God was well pleased, and from whom it was "[ordained] before the world that the Word should be born of thee, the "Word Whom, together with His Father and the [B fol. 8*a*. 1] Holy "Spirit, we adore. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, the Mother of Him "Whose Apostle I am. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, on whose virginity "Him to Whom thou didst give birth set a seal after He had been born, "and whose virginity was not destroyed."

Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, who didst give birth to God without the foundation of thy womb being rent asunder. Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, who didst give birth to the Word without the seal of thy virginity being opened and changed, and who art called Mother through the birth of our holy Redeemer. Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, for thou hast found grace, and God is with thee. Entreat thou and make intercession with thy beloved Son that He may pardon unto us our sins.

On the sixteenth day of the month Yakâtit[1] there shall be celebrated the commemoration of our holy Lady, the Virgin two-fold MARY, who gave birth to God, because she received therein the Covenant of Mercy from her Son, our Redeemer Jesus Christ. Whosoever shall celebrate her commemoration, and shall call upon her name, and shall give alms unto the poor and needy, even if it be a cup of cold water only, [shall receive his reward.]

Now when the Son of this holy woman MARY [A fol. 75*a*. 2], whose pure flesh He had taken upon Himself, went up into heaven, He sat on the right hand of His Father, having fulfilled all the Law, and taken upon Himself human nature, but without sin, and gained dominion over the pains of the Cross by His good pleasure and will which He exercised for our redemption. And He left his mother MARY in the house of John His disciple, whom He loved, and whom He committed unto her protection, saying, "Behold thy son", and to that disciple also He said, "Behold thy mother"; and our Lady Mary dwelt [there], and she was wont to go unto the grave of her Son, that is to say, to Golgotha, [A fol. 75*b*. 1] to pray there. And it came to pass that when the Jews saw her they were filled with wrath and jealousy, and they wished to stone her, but God made her to disappear from their sight. Then they took counsel together and appointed guards over His grave, so that she might not be able to come and pray there again; but she ceased not to go there each day. Now the guards never saw her, for the mantle of the glory of her Son made her to be invisible, and angels came unto her at all times to minister unto her, and her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, watched over her [A fol. 75*b*. 2] continually, and fulfilled for her all her desires. And after this He made her to ascend into heaven, and He shewed her the place where the righteous rest and where dwell Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the spirits of all the fathers who had died from Adam until Christ(?) received her. And they bowed down before her and said, "Glory be unto God Who hath created thee for us, flesh of "our flesh, and bone of our bone; in thee we have found redemption, and "thou hast become the gate of life [leading] from destruction through the "Incarnation of the Son of God of thee" [A fol. 76*a*. 1]. Then the angels transported her and brought her unto her beloved Son [Who was seated upon] His throne; and flames of fire covered Him round about on the right hand and on the left. Then our Lord took her hand, and He kissed her mouth and said unto her, "Hast thou come, O My Mother?" Then He made her to ascend His glorious throne and He made her to sit [there] with Him, and He told her the story of the joy and gladness which eye had never seen, and ear had never heard, and the heart of man had never imagined, that He had prepared for her. And below the throne she saw David [A fol. 76*a*. 2]. her father, the king of Israel, together with all the company of the Prophets, and the angels, and the souls of the righteous were standing round about them, and he was singing psalms to his harp and saying, "Hearken, O my daughter, see, and "incline thine ear, forget thy people in thy father's house, for the King "hath desired thy beauty, and He is thy Lord."

And again the angels set her so that she might see the place of judgment, and they brought her unto the place which was the boundary of the darkness that had been prepared for Satan and his angels, and for all those who walked in his ways [A fol. 76*b*. 1]. Then our Lady MARY said, "Woe is me! Who could announce unto the children of men that "they would come here?" And an angel said unto her, "Fear thou not, "O Mary, God is with thee. He is with thee, and with those who [shall "come] after thee". Then the angels bore her along and brought her back to the [former] place, and straightway our Lady Mary sat down, being exceedingly sorrowful for all the sinners. And inasmuch as that day was the sixteenth day of the month Yakâtît, she stood up at the place of the skull (i. e., Golgotha), and [A fol. 76 b. 2] she made supplication unto her Son, saying, "I adjure Thee, O my Son, by God Almighty "Thy Father, and by Thy Name Christ, and by the Paraclete Thy Spirit, "and by my womb which bore Thee, Whom earth is not able to bear, "and Whom even the angels are not able to approach, for nine months "and five days; I adjure Thee, O my Son, by Thy going forth from "me, without pain, and by Thy birth; I adjure Thee by my breasts "which gave Thee suck, and by my lips which kissed Thee, and by my "arms which embraced Thee, and by my feet [A fol. 77 a. 1] which walk- "ed about with Thee; I adjure Thee by the cradle wherein Thou didst "lie, and by the swaddling bands wherein Thou wast swathed; O my "Son, my beloved one, I entreat and make supplication unto Thee that "Thou mayest hearken unto the voice of my petition, and mayest come "unto me, and mayest fulfil everything which is in my heart."

And it came to pass that when our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, the mother of the Light, had thus spoken, our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ came down, and with Him and round about Him were thousands of thousands and tens of thousands of thousands of angels. And He said [A fol. 77 a. 2] unto her, "What shall I do for thee, O Mary My mother? "And what wish is it that thou desirest that I shall fulfil for thee?" Then our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, made answer unto her beloved Son, and said unto Him, "O my Son, my beloved One, my Lord and my "Redeemer, my Hope and my Refuge, my trust is in Thee. In Thee

"have I my strength, and in Thy safe place do Thou protect me; Thou "art He Whom I remember always. And now, hearken Thou unto my "prayer and unto my entreaty, and incline Thine ear unto the words of "my mouth. I who speak unto Thee am Thy mother MARY, and I am "Thine handmaiden [A fol. 77*b*. 1]. Whosoever shall celebrate the festival "of my commemoration, or shall build a church in my name, or shall "clothe the naked, or shall visit the sick, or shall feed the hungry, or shall "give to drink him that is thirsty, or shall comfort him that is sorrowful, "or shall make to rejoice him that is sorrowful, or shall write a book of "my praises, or shall meditate upon the hymns to me on [the day of] my "festival, reward Thou him, O Lord, with a good reward from Thyself "the which eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard of, nor mind of man hath "conceived. I beseech Thee, and I make supplication unto Thee, O Lord, "on behalf of all those who shall believe on me, and do Thou make them "to be free from Sheol [A fol. 77*b*. 2]; and remember Thou him that is "an hungered, and him that is athirst, and all the trials which came upon "me with Thee". And our Lord Jesus Christ answered and said unto her, "It shall be even as thou sayest, and I will fulfil for thee all thy peti- "tion. Did I not become man through thee? I swear by Myself that I "will not break My covenant with thee". May her blessing be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Salutation unto thee, O Book of the Law and Covenant like unto the Table of stone

For each and every one who shall call upon thy name!

Let the hearts of sinners [A fol. 78*a*. 1] be softened, let the hearts of the violent be softened,

Let the hearts of those who are afflicted with sorrow be softened, O MARY! Amen.

THE COVENANT OF CHRIST WITH THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

One day our Lord Jesus Christ said unto MARY, "What sorrow "can be greater than that which came upon thee for My sake?" And our Lady MARY said unto Him, "O my Lord and God, there were the "five sorrows which came upon me for Thy sake, and they had exceed-"ingly great power over me. The first of them was the sorrow which I "endured[1] when Simeon prophesied concerning Thee in the Sanctuary, "how that the Jews would slay Thee. [A fol. 1*b*. 2] The second sorrow "which I endured was when I missed Thee in the Sanctuary and I was "seeking for Thee three days. The third sorrow which I endured was "when I remembered how they bound Thee hand and foot, and how the "men of Pilate scurged Thy back. The fourth sorrow which I endured was "when they crucified Thee between two thieves on the day of the Eve "of the Sabbath, and Thou wert naked, and they drove five nails through "Thy body. And the fifth sorrow which I endured was when I remember-"ed how Joseph and Nicodemus[2] took Thee down from the Cross and "swathed Thee in fine linen, and laid Thee in the tomb." And our Lord said unto her who had given Him birth, "Thus saith our Father Who "is in heaven, 'Whosoever shall keep in remembrance the sorrows and

"'[A fol. 2*a*. 1] sufferings which have come upon thee for My sake, and "'the salutation of Gabriel, I will remit to him his sins. And whosoever "'shall give an offering for thy name's sake I will remit to him his sins, "'and I will make him to inherit the kingdom of heaven. And I will "'come to him with thee, O thou Who didst give Me birth, and I will "'appear to him three days before his death'". This was the covenant which He made with His Mother, and she told it unto Dexius, who wrote it down together with [the account of] her Miracles, so that [all] believers might read it. May her prayer and blessing be with us for ever and ever! Amen.

What sorrow can be greater than the sorrows which came upon thee, O Virgin?
For thou didst give a cry when He cried unto thee a cry
On the day of the Eve of the Sabbath [A fol. 2*a*. 2] in which He was upon the holy wood, the Cross.
By thy five sorrows, O deliver me from perdition,
And from mighty terror of the awful Sheol (i. e., Hell).

BISHOP DEXIUS AND THE VIRGIN MARY.

[A fol. 3*a*. 1, B fol. 9*a*. 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD, WE WILL WRITE THE BOOK OF THE MIRACLES OF OUR LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH UNTO GOD. MAY HER PRAYER AND BLESSING BE WITH OUR KING DAVID! [AMEN].

Now there was a certain bishop in the church of Ṭelṭelyâ whose name was Dexius, and he was a righteous man, and a fearer of God, and he loved our Lady MARY exceedingly; his mouth declared her praise [B fol. 9*a*. 2], and his heart abounded [with thoughts of her], and he ministered unto her with exceedingly great diligence and care, and he wrote the Book of her Miracles and History, and he ceased [A fol. 3*a*. 2] not to meditate upon the same at eventide and at morn. And it came to pass that when he came nigh to finishing the writing of her praises, our Lady the Virgin MARY, the majesty of Christian people, brought unto him glad tidings openly, and she said unto him, "Give me the Book of "my History and Miracles, which my beloved son hath made, into my "hands"; and she took the Book of her Miracles, and she opened it and read therein, and she was exceedingly pleased therewith. And she said unto him, "Behold, O my beloved, thou hast toiled for me. Behold now, "I am well pleased with thee, and I give thanks unto thee. And the "blessing of [B fol. 9*b*. 1] my beloved Son shall be upon thee and shall "dwell in thy house, and He shall bless thy children and those that shall "be descended from thee with the blessing of heaven [A fol. 3*b*. 1] because "thou hast written this Book for me"; and having said these words she disappeared from him. And the bishop rejoiced with an exceeding great joy because MARY had brought him glad tidings, and had shown herself unto him openly, and had spoken unto him mouth to mouth; and he loved her the more, and his heart was smitten with deep love for her. Then he meditated in his heart and said, "Behold, I will exalt her honour and "majesty, and I will add thereunto very much more than I have been "wont to do aforetime". And he made a great festival, the like of which man had never made, in commemoration of [B fol. 9*b*. 2] MARY, not on the day of her glorious nativity, but before it, and he chose one day of all [A fol. 3*b*. 2] the days and established the celebration of the festival upon it, and he made regulations concerning it and confirmed it. And all the people of the city celebrate the festival unto this day according to the ordinance of the bishop, and they keep the feast of the commemoration of MARY with joy and gladness.

And our Lady MARY, the worker of good and the giver of [B fol. 10*a*. 1] grace, appeared a second time unto the bishop, and she had in her hand glorious, and beautiful, and splendid, and holy apparel. And Mâryâm (MARY), that is, Mârîhâm, answered and said unto him, "O "Dexius my beloved chosen one, my good and faithful servant, I praise "thee, and I extol thee, and I rejoice in thee, and [A fol. 4*a*. 1] I am well-"pleased with thy work. And inasmuch as thou hast rejoiced in me, and "hast ordained and established a festival in mine honour—now the Arch-"angel Gabriel, who brought unto me the glad tidings of the advent of "my beloved Son, hath related this unto me, and an angel hath told me "that thou hast published abroad the commemoration of my festival unto "all the people of the world each year, and hast made the poor, and the "[B fol. 10*a*. 2] needy, and all the people of the city to rejoice and be glad "for my name's sake—I will increase the reward of thine abundant toil in "this world, and I will exalt thine episcopal throne among [those of other "bishops] in proportion as thou hast shewn honour unto [A fol. 4*a*. 2] "me. And behold now, I have brought unto thee from heaven apparel "which hath been woven by the command of my beloved Son. [Take it,] "and put it on when thou art about to minister at the service or at the "consecration of the Eucharist, and no man shall have the power to array "himself therein except thyself, and none besides thee shall dare to sit "upon thy throne; and if there be any man who shall set himself in op-"position to the word of my commandment I will take vengeance upon "him with a mighty vengeance." And it came to pass that when the bishop had become old he brought his days to an end at a ripe old age, and he [B fol. 10*b*. 1] departed this world in peace and entered into life. And the apparel which MARY had given unto him remained among the treasures of the church [A fol. 4*b*. 1], and it was radiantly white and exceedingly splendid.

MARY. And the priests of the church and the elders of the city said unto him, "Put not on this apparel before thou hast asked MARY [B fol. 10*b*. 2] "if she will be pleased to give it unto thee even as she gave it unto bishop "Dexius". And he said unto them, "I am the bishop even as he was, and "I have been appointed to [this] rank in the church; [A fol. 4*b*. 2] and "behold, I will put on this apparel, and I will take my seat upon his throne." So he did according to the desire of his heart, and they were not able to restrain him; and of his own will he put on the apparel and he was so bold as to go up upon the throne and to take his seat thereupon. And it came to pass at that time that he fell down from the throne and was dashed in pieces, and there was great dismay and quaking in the church; and Mâryâm (MARY), that is, Mârîhâm, [B fol. 11*a*. 1] smote him by the hand of the angel called Râguĕêl, and he perished and died. And violent grief, and fear, and dismay laid hold upon the people, and the priests, and deacons, who were gathered together in that place, and [A fol. 5*a*. 1] after they had come to themselves they marvelled and were silent by reason of the miracle which Mâryâm, that is, Mârîhâm, had wrought. And they ascribed glory unto God, and they exalted the greatness of the honour of Mâryâm, that is, Mârîhâm, and they worshipped with great humility kneeling upon their knees in the little chapel, and they offered up their praisings of MARY [B fol. 11*a*. 2] in fear and in trembling. And they brought forward as offerings for her service thousands [of pieces] of gold and silver, because they had seen the awful and terrifying wonder concerning the bishop [which had been wrought] in the church; and they exalted her and paid honour unto her. May her prayer and supplication redeem our king David from a cruel [A fol. 5*a*. 2] death and from the punishment of the judgment for ever.

thy Miracles didst lay a ban upon another man that he should not put on his apparel nor seat himself upon his throne, and who, when a certain violent bishop opposed thy command and took his seat upon the throne of Dexius without being [B fol. 11*b*. 1] blessed by thee, didst smite him speedily by the hand of the angel Râguĕêl, so likewise do thou smite the enemies of the life of thy servant Khâyla Mâryâm at morn and at eve, so that he may proclaim the story of [thy greatness] for ever and ever. Amen. Dexius having gathered together and written down the Miracles of her who, being in a state of virginity, conceived and brought forth a child, the angel Gabriel having announced to her a message of glad tidings of great joy, and had published abroad the day of her commemoration, she gave him apparel and a throne.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE POOR MONK.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD.

May her prayer and blessing be with her servant Khâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain poor monk who possessed neither raiment nor food, but he believed on our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God, and he said unto her, "O give thou the command [B fol. 11*b*. 2] concerning "me that I may eat, and drink, and clothe myself withal"; and having said these words he fell asleep. And it came to pass that our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God, came at the time of midnight, and she appeared unto him in a vision, and said unto him, "What sayest thou, O monk? "Take this raiment and it shall be thine." And when he awoke from his sleep he found apparel [there], and he rejoiced with an exceedingly great joy, and all the people who saw this miracle which our Lady

MARY, who gave birth to God, had wrought marvelled. May her prayer and blessing be with her servant Khâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

PRAYER BY THE COMPILER OF THE MIRACLES OF THE VIRGIN.

[A fol. 6*b*. 1] When a man desireth to build a house doth he not first of all make ready everything which he will require therefor? O MARY, I beseech thee to give unto me the spirit of knowledge, and since I desire to relate thy wonderful deeds make me to understand them, and make me to follow in a straight path thy gracious acts.

CHAPTER I.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE ARTIFICER.

[B fol. 12*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH UNTO GOD. May her prayer and the mercy of her beloved Son be with the soul of our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain artificer who loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, with all his heart, and he was wont to read salutations unto her day by day [A fol. 6*b*. 2] continually, both evening and morning; and he continued to salute her for many days. And it came to pass one day that he said unto her, "O my "gracious Lady, I pay salutations unto thee continually, but thou dost "never return my salutation unto me"; and after he had said these words unto her he began to read the salutation of our Lady MARY, standing before her image. [B fol. 12*b*. 2] And when he came to the passage where he should say, "Blessed art thou among women", our Lady MARY, who gave birth unto God, answered him from out of the image, and said unto him, "And blessed art thou among men"; and thus she spake unto him thrice. Now when the artificer heard these words from the [A fol. 7*a*. 1] image of our Lady MARY, he bowed down before her and repented himself that he had dared to speak unto her; but he rejoiced because of the words which she had spoken unto him. And he loved her much more than formerly, and he devoted himself the more to her service until he passed away from this fleeting world. May the prayer and blessing of our Lady MARY [B fol. 13*a*. 1] be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Inasmuch as the angel who announced glad tidings [unto thee] gave thee an everlasting salutation,
The artificer was dear unto thee.
Since thou, O MARY, wert blessed by the Book of Ḥâwî[1],
Bless me, O my Lady, and [may] thy Son [A fol. 7*a*. 2] the Nazarene [bless me]
With the blessings of Judah and Levi!

Now there was a certain Hebrew in the city of Akhmîm[1] who loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, from the depth (literally root) of his heart, and the mention of her name with fear and trembling was never absent from his tongue; and when he bowed down before her he was wont to embrace the ground in honour of her name. And the man was a priest, and he ministered holily [A fol. 8*a*. 2] in the church at the time of [burning] incense and [of offering up] the Offering. And it came to pass that when the days of his youth had passed he lacked strength and he was [B fol. 13*b*. 1] unable to stand up. And when the archbishop knew that he had become feeble and was not able to stand up, he associated two deacons with him that they might give him assistance. Now one day as he was praising the name of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and was bowing down [to her] to the ground, he fell forwards upon his breast and his backbone was broken. And he cried out with a loud voice, and said, "O my Lady MARY, come thou and help me in my [A fol. 8*b*. 1] "fall". Then straightway our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared unto him standing on the right of the altar; and she stretched out her hand to him and touched his backbone which was broken, and made it whole, and she gave him a sign to come and stand on the [B fol. 14*a*. 1] right of the altar by her side. And immediately he saw this he rejoiced greatly, and he marvelled and was astonished at the beauty of her form and at the splendour (or light) which was upon her; and his old age was renewed, and he became a vigorous young man [again]. And he continued to minister in the church unto our holy Lady the Virgin MARY all his days, and she added unto the years of his life one hundred and thirty [A fol. 8*b*. 2] years; and all his days were two hundred and thirty

Now there was a certain monk called Damianus who dwelt in the city of Philippi,[1] and he loved our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, from the depth (literally root) of his heart, and he served her with all his power and strength, and he kept vigil by day and by night in her church. And that monk was a scribe, and it came to pass as he was copying the books that every time he had to make mention of our holy [A fol. 9*b*. 2] Lady MARY [B fol. 15*a*. 2] he magnified her and paid honour unto her. Now, he did not write her name with common black ink,[2] but he wrote it with ink of gold and silver, and with rose-coloured paint, and with divers splendid colours which were like unto them in beauty and value. And when that scribe fell ill, and was nigh unto death, before his soul went forth [from his body] our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, appeared unto him, and said unto him, "O my faithful servant, art not thou he who "instead of writing my name in common black ink has done so with ink "of gold and silver, and with divers splendid colours which are like unto "them in beauty and value, and has decorated it and made it glorious "with all thy might? Abbâs, Bishop of Rome, in administering the Holy Mysteries to a woman, touches her face.

Now there was a certain bishop of Rome who was called Abbâs; and he was a good and holy man, and he feared God Almighty and kept himself from unchastity and from meditation upon evil. And it came to pass that one day during the festival when he was saying the prayer of consecration so that he might administer the Holy Mysteries to the people—now the people, both men and women, were in the habit at the time when they were about to receive the Holy [A fol. 11*a*. 2] Mysteries, before they prostrated themselves, of embracing the hands and the feet of the priest who was going to minister unto them—he smelt [B fol. 16*b*. 2] the smell of a certain woman as she was embracing his hands, and the unclean desire of the flesh entered into his heart, and he burned with the flame of lust. And after he had ended the Offering, he departed and went quickly into the house of the treasures belonging to the church, and he took a knife and cut off his hand, and he began to weep. And it came to pass that when he tarried the people in the sanctuary were very sad, and the priests and deacons went to him, and said unto him, "O master "and governor of the people, we have [A fol. 11*b*. 1] waited long [for thee], "and we are greatly grieved at thy tarrying"; and when they spake these words to him he wept the more, and then he rose up and went with them. And he came before the picture of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, [B fol. 17*a*. 1] and fell down on his face before it, and he worshipped her and made supplication unto her and entreated her to have mercy upon him, and to help him, and to pardon him his sin. Then straightway our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared unto him, and she took his hand in her holy hands, and re-joined [it] to the place from which it had been cut off, and it became whole even as it was aforetime, and no mark [A fol. 11*b*. 2] whatever of the cut could be found; then she disappeared from him. And when the priests and deacons saw this they marvelled and were silent, and they related this miracle to the people; and they ascribed praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and gave thanks to our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who is able to perform all things and who worketh miracles and doeth wonderful deeds. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be [B fol. 17*a*. 2] with our king David for ever and for ever! Amen.

Now Abbâs, a priest of Rome,
Having taken a knife which caused pain, cut off his hand.
As thou, O MARY, the [A fol. 12*a*. 1] sister of Salome, didst heal him aforetime,
Even so heal thou the wound of my soul, and grant me rest
Whensoever I invoke thy name which giveth protection.

CHAPTER VI.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE MONK ISAAC.

[A fol. 13*a*. 1; B fol. 18*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and blessing be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was in this holy monastery, which was famous in the days of the Abbûna Abbâ Gabriel, Archbishop of Alexandria, a certain holy monk who had lived here from his youth, and his name was Isaac; and he loved our Lady with all his might. And he prepared for himself certain work to do without any man knowing thereof, and he was the guardian of the church, and the key [thereof] was in his hand. And after the prayer which was said before [A fol. 13*a*. 2] sleep was ended, Isaac, a monk, having prayed to Christ that he might see His mother, the Virgin Mary appears to him from her shrine. At the sight of her Isaac falls prostrate as one dead, but the Virgin raises him up, and speaks words of comfort to him.

and when the monks had gone into their cells to sleep, Isaac used to go to the church, and having opened the door [B fol. 18*a*. 2] he would go inside it, and stand up before the image of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, which was in the western wall, the whole night long. And he would begin to say the prayer of the Gospel, and he would prostrate himself before her three hundred times[1], and say at each prostration, "O "my Lord Jesus Christ, make me to see Thy Mother"; and he continued to do this for seven years and no man whatever knew thereof. And it came to pass, at the end of the seven years, on a certain night of the festival of our Lady the Virgin which falleth on the twenty-first day of the month Tâkhshâsh[2], when Isaac [A fol. 13*b*. 1] was bowing down before the image of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, that she came forth from her image and she shone with an exceedingly great splendour which was seven times brighter than lightning. [B fol. 18*b*. 1] And she said unto him, "Why hast thou wearied thyself [in entreating] my beloved Son to "shew thee her who gave Him birth? Behold, I am the Mother of Life, "and the woman who gave birth to Jesus Christ; command me and I "will come to thee, and whatsoever thou desirest that will I do for thee". And he said unto her, "O my Lady, I beseech thee to make supplication "on my behalf to thy beloved Son". And she said unto him, "Behold, "God Almighty hath received thy petition, and He hath commanded me "to come to thee and to fulfil thy desire; and three days [A fol. 13*b*. 2] "hence thou shalt be with me where I am". And it came to pass that when he heard her words and saw her beauty and that she was crowned with light, he fell down upon the ground and became like a dead man. Then did she take hold of him with her hand and lift him [B fol. 18*b*. 2] up, and she disappeared from him into the image which was before him.

[2] December 17.

Then straightway Isaac went into [his] cell, and the sickness of fever fell upon him, and in the morning he called for the bishop of the city, whose name was Abraham, and who chanced to be dwelling in the monastery that day, and when he came to him he made known to him all that he had seen. And Isaac said unto him, "O my father, "release me from all the bonds of [my] sin, for I dared to beseech "God to shew me her who [A fol. 14*a*. 1] gave Him birth, a thing for "which I was unfit"; and he released him, and said unto him, "O my son, "if thou goest to God make thou mention of me, so that I may find mercy "[with Him] on the day of the great judgment". And at the end of the third day Isaac died, and he inherited life everlasting, even as our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, had promised him. May her blessing and prayer be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Isaac the monk, having wished and desired greatly,
Saw thy beautiful face [O MARY] on a certain day.
As thou didst speak unto him until he rejoiced exceedingly,
So, O my Lady, say thou unto me, "Rejoice, O my servant,
"After three [A fol. 14*a*. 2] days thou shalt be with me."

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE CHILD MARY.

[A fol. 15*a*. 1; B fol. 19*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our King David for ever and ever! Amen.

to a woman by whom he had had three children, two boys and one girl. Now the girl was young, and she was called Mary. And the mother of the children died, and they mourned for her. And it came to pass on a day, which was the festival of the glorious [A fol. 15*a*. 2] Nativity[1], that they wished to go to the church, and they left the little girl [in the house] and fastened the door upon her [B fol. 19*b*. 2], so that she might not go out, for it was night. But she wept and cried out, saying, "Take me with "you, and let me participate in the offering up of the Offering"; but they refused [to take] her, and they went on their way. Then she went to the image of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and she cried out with tears, saying, "O my Lady, have compassion upon me, and "give me consolation". And straightway our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who maketh to rejoice and giveth consolation to those who make supplication unto her, appeared unto the girl, and said unto her, "What aileth "thee, O my daughter?" And our holy [A fol. 15*b*. 1] Lady MARY [B fol. 20*a*. 1] embraced the child, who said unto her, "They would not let me "go to church to partake of the Offering on the holy festival [of the day] "on which our Redeemer was born". And our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, said unto her, "Be not grieved, and come [with me]"; and she carried the child to the church, and she partook of the Offering with the folk who were enlightened. Then our Lady MARY said unto her, "Three days hence I will take thee, and thou shalt be with me"; and three days later the child departed this life, and the Virgin MARY made her like unto herself. And a certain good, and righteous, and [A fol. 15*b*. 2] God-fearing man saw the child arrayed in purple and following our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, the Mother of life, who redeemeth us, and he marvelled greatly, and he told the people [concerning her]. And those who heard this praised the glorious and Most High

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE PAINTER.

[A fol. 17*a*. 1; B fol. 21*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was in days of old a certain man who was a painter, and there was no one who could be compared with him in the work of painting; and he loved our holy Lady the Virgin MARY with his whole heart. And whensoever he painted a portrait of her he did so with the most extreme care, and he employed his greatest skill in the performance of the work. And it came to pass that he painted a likeness of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, in a certain church in the country of France on [A fol. 17*a*. 2] a stone wall; and the picture was a most wonderful and marvellous piece of work, and every one who saw it was [B fol. 21*a*. 2] astonished at the beauty of her form, and was led to believe that she was speaking unto him. And he painted another picture of Paradise [shewing] how [the blessed] dwelt therein; and this picture was [painted] by the side of the likeness of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY. And he painted yet another picture of hell and of the Devil who had been cast therein, and of his wicked fiends. And Satan saw him and was filled with rage against him, and he threw down the scaffolding on which he was painting, and both the painter and his scaffolding were falling [B fol. 21*b*. 1] to the ground—now the French church was a very lofty one. And the painter cried out, "O my Lady "MARY, [A fol. 17*b*. 1] help me and deliver me from destruction". And straightway a hand of light came forth from the likeness of the Virgin, and she stretched forth her arm and laid hold of the man who was suspended in mid-air with her hand from out of the picture, and he remained suspended at a height of ten cubits from the ground; and the painter remained suspended from the hand out of the picture and uttering cries for the space of one hour. And when the people heard his outcry they came to him and saw what a wonderful thing had been wrought by our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY; then, little by little, she let the painter come down, and she handed him over to the men that they might [A fol. 17*b*. 2] deliver him one to the other. And the people who saw this wonderful thing gave glory unto God Almighty [B fol. 21*b*. 2], and praised our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and they said, "Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy "womb"; and they celebrated a great festival for seven days. And they called that picture, "The picture which delivered him and raised him up "out of the dust"; and the hand hath remained stretched out from the picture, just as it was when it laid hold on the painter, even unto this day, so that it may be a memorial of the event unto him that shall come after. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with [A fol. 18*a*. 1] our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

and knelt down upon his knees on the ground [A fol. 21*a*. 2]. Now when he knelt down, the captain of the thieves saw a lady come down from heaven with great glory, and there were beautiful virgins with her; and they set a seat for her, and she sat [B fol. 24*b*. 2] down in front of Zacharias, from whose mouth, every time he spake, there came forth a rose. And our holy Lady the Virgin MARY rose up and took him to her bosom until she had received fifty roses from him; now the captain of the thieves counted them and he saw them with his own eyes. And it came to pass that when Zacharias had finished his prayer, our holy Lady, the [A fol. 21*b*. 1] two-fold Virgin MARY, laid her hand upon his head, and having blessed him she went up into heaven with the virgins; and the captain of the thieves marvelled at what he had seen, and he turned away into the wilderness. Then Zacharias returned to set out again on his [B fol. 49*a*. 1] journey, and immediately the thieves rose up against him and seized him. And the captain of the thieves said unto him, "Tell me how thou couldst send away [those] beautiful women and "what thou hast done with them." And Zacharias said unto him, "I am "a sinful man, and I know nothing whatever of beautiful women. But I "used to offer as a gift each day to our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, "who gave birth to God, [A fol. 21*b*. 2] fifty salutations, saying, Rejoice, "O thou who art full of grace, [for] God is with thee." Then the captain of the thieves made known unto Zacharias everything [which he had seen], and he said, "From this day I will turn to repentance, and I will "serve the Lady of us all, the holy woman, the two-fold Virgin MARY, "all [B fol. 49*a*. 2] the days of my life"; and thus also spake all the thieves. And they sent Zacharias away on his journey and he departed in peace; and afterwards the thieves repented and became monks, and they served our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, all the days of their life. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WOMEN JULIANA AND BARBARA.

Now there were two handmaidens of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God in Bethlehem of the children of Judah; the name of one was Juliana, and the name of the other was Barbara. And one day, as they were going to Jerusalem to worship at the Feast of the Departure of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY in the city of Rôsmâdûk, they were surrounded by thieves who took away their food from them. And it came to pass that when the thieves had divided [A fol. 23*a*. 2] the bread which they had taken from them, they began to eat it among themselves. And as each one of them put a [B fol. 50*a*. 2] morsel of it into his mouth and began to eat, straightway their front teeth and their grinders became broken, and their mouths were filled with pieces of broken teeth, and the insides of their mouths and throats were deeply cut by them; and they could not speak and were nigh unto death. And those who saw and heard this miracle marvelled greatly and were astonished, and by reason of their terror and awe of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, fear and trembling entered into their hearts. Then the thieves went and repented, and they forsook their evil deeds, and they entreated forgiveness of their sins from our holy Lady the [A fol. 23*b*. 1] Virgin MARY, and they gave unto Juliana and [B fol. 50*b*. 1] Barbara each a double portion of goods in return for their food which they had carried off. And our Lady, the storehouse of mercy, spared them, and restored their teeth to the condition in which they were aforetime; for she is able to do all things, and there is nothing which she cannot do, and she is a worker of miracles and wonders. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

[B fol. 50*b*. 2] Thy power, O MARY, hath broken the tooth of our sin.
When [the thieves] ate together morsels of the bread of the two daughters
Thy power made manifest a wonderful thing,
And thou, O my Lady, didst perform a work unknown [before];

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE THREE ARABS.

[A fol. 24*b*. 1; B fol. 51*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Three men are wrecked. Two of them having cried to the Virgin Mary, are cast up on a rock and are saved; the third, who mocked at them is swallowed up alive by a crocodile.

(See page 43).

And it came to pass on a day that three Arabs set out [to sail] to the country of Rîf when the sea was very rough[1] and troubled, and the waves thereof ran high, and they came into tribulation; and in order to fulfil their desire they [tried to] sail across it, but the waves were too strong for them and they were unable to sail [against them], and [the sea] wished to drown them. And the men, according to the custom of their fathers, prayed to their false Prophet, but they did not [A fol. 24*b*. 2] find deliverance. And it came to pass, when they were in despair of their lives, that one of them who had gone to the Monastery of Ḳalmôn and had seen the miracles [B fol. 51*b*. 2] [which were wrought there] cried out, "O MARY of the Monastery of Ḳalmôn, who didst at one time make "intercession for me, deliver me. And if thou dost deliver me from drown-"ing in this sea I will give to thy church a camel load of dates for the "food of the monks, and the camel also shall belong to the Monastery, "so that it shall carry whatsoever the monks desire." And his companion said, "Yea verily, thou hast done well to mention this great name". But when their companion heard this speech he laughed at them, and said, "O dogs, why do ye forsake your faith and make entreaty [A fol. 25*a*. 1] "for mercy to Mary?" And at that very moment he was overwhelmed in the sea, and a crocodile swallowed him, but so that the man's companions might see him and the miracle might be made manifest unto them the beast brought him up [again], and held him in his mouth. Then the two men made supplication unto our [B fol. 52*a*. 1] holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, and they found a mighty rock, and they climbed up upon it and stood in the midst of the raging water. And a ship which was passing that way came, and they embarked therein, and they arrived in the port thereof.

Then straightway the Arab took a camel, which was the finest of all his camels, and having laden it with dates he brought it to Solomon the Abbot of the [A fol. 25*a*. 2] Monastery of Ḳalmôn, and to all the monks, and he related unto them everything which had taken place. Now this Arab's companion possessed many sheep, and he sheared their wool and brought it to the monks, and said, "Take this wool and make of it "clothing for yourselves, for the sake of our Lady MARY who delivered "me from drowning." And when the monks [B fol. 52*a*. 2] heard his speech they gave praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and they praised our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who is gracious and full of mercy. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

[A fol. 25*b*. 1] Of the Arab men in the raging water their strength

Lady, the Virgin MARY. And our holy Lady MARY was wont to converse with a certain priest in [his] dreams, and she said unto him, "Build "me a church on the border of Jericho"; and she continued to speak [A fol. 26*b*. 2] to him in this wise for many years, and he spake to the monks and to all the people, but they would not do as he wished. And it came to pass that when they had refused to build a church to the Virgin in the place where she wished, the [old] church, and the wall thereof, and the cells of the monks, split asunder. Then the [whole] building went down to the border of Jericho [B fol. 54*a*. 2]. And by the might of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY the inner part thereof was made strong, and the church and the walls, and the cells of the monks became firm and stable even as they were aforetime, and the fair appearance of the church, and of its wall, and of the cells of the monks was unchanged. Now the monks who dwelt in that monastery were exceedingly numerous, and they were asleep on the night in which the church moved out of its place, and they knew nothing whatever about it [A fol. 27*a*. 1] until the following morning, when they went out from their cells and saw Jericho in their courtyard; and all the monks uttered loud outcries and were astonished with a mighty astonishment. And they sent to the great folk of the city, and they all came, both male and female, and they marvelled when they saw this miracle, the like of which hath never been done neither before nor since. CHAPTER XIV.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE EGYPTIAN PRIEST JOHN.

[A fol. 28*a*. 1; B fol. 55*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain priest in the city of Cairo called John Bakansî, and he dwelt in a church which had been built in the name of the martyr Marḳôryôs (Mercurius)[1]; and the days of this man were a

[1] I. e., the Dêr of Abû's Sefên, in which are situated the churches of the Virgin, Shenûti, and Abû's Sefên. The last named church was built, or rebuilt, in the tenth century, and is dedicated to Saint Mercurius, who is called "Abû's Sefên", or "Father of the two swords", because in Coptic pictures he is represented brandishing a sword in each hand over his fallen foe, the heathen king Julianus. The church measures 90 feet × 50 feet, and is built chiefly of brick; there are no pillars in it. It contains a fine ebony partition dating from A. D. 927, some pictures, an altar casket dating from A. D. 1280, and a marble pulpit. In the church are chapels dedicated to Saints Gabriel, John the Baptist, James, Mâr Buḳṭôr, Antony, Abbâ Nûb, Michael and George. There is a legend connected with the church of Mercurius. The great Mu'izz asked the patriarch Ephraim if it was true that it was written in the Christian Scriptures that a man could by faith remove a mountain, and when he answered in the affirmative, Sulṭân Mu'izz told him that unless he proved these words to him he would wipe out the very name of Christian. In great grief the patriarch and all his notables fasted and prayed for three days, when the Virgin appeared to him and told him to go into the street and look for a one-eyed man. The patriarch did so and found the man who, on hearing what the Sulṭân had threatened to do, told Ephraim to have no fear, but to go before him and prove the words of Scripture boldly. At a given time Ephraim appeared before Mu'izz with a large company of ecclesiastics and people, and when they all cried out with loud voices "Kyrie Eleëson" the mountain near moved itself away out of its place. See BUTLER, Coptic Churches, Oxford, 1884, vol. 1. p. 76, &c.

hundred years, and both his eyes were blind, and he remained for the whole of the past year seeing nothing at all. And when [A fol. 28*a*. 2] the light of [B fol. 55*b*. 1] his eyes failed he began to take an oath[1] without any man knowing thereof. Now there was in that church a picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, [which looked] towards the east, and after the concluding prayer [had been said] at midnight, when the monks had departed unto their cells, that priest was wont to go to the picture and to bow down before her a great number of times, and he used to salute her with the salutation of the angel three hundred times; and then he made entreaty unto her that she would restore the sight of his eyes. Now he continued to act in this wise for a whole year, and it came to pass that at the end of a full year, on a certain night, as he was singing [A fol. 28*b*. 1] the salutation of the angel according to his wont, and was standing before the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, drowsiness [B fol. 56*a*. 1] came [upon him] and he fell asleep immediately. And he saw in his dream that there came forth from the picture a most beautiful woman who shone with light which was seven times brighter than that of the sun, and she drew nigh unto him and took out her breasts from inside her apparel and pressed milk out of them upon his eyes; then she made the sign of the cross over him with her holy hands and disappeared into the picture. And straightway his eyes were opened and he saw the eikôn burning with fire, and he found in his eyes milk which sent forth sweet [A fol. 28*b*. 2] fragrance. And he cried out, saying, "Hail to thee, O thou that art full of grace, [for] God "is with thee"; and when the monks heard his outcry they came unto him quickly, so that they might know what had happened. And the priest told them everything which he had seen, and they looked at his eyes, and they perceived the traces of the milk [B fol. 56*a*. 2] in them, and they laid their hands upon his eyes and they saluted him. Then they went to the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and each one of them bowed down before her and prostrated himself before her as long as they were able to do so. And the priest John performed the service of the consecration of the Eucharist on that day, and he administered the holy Mysteries unto [A fol. 29*a*. 1] the monks and unto the people; and he lived twenty years after this, and he continued to minister in the church until he died in peace. And moreover incline thine ear to my petition!

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE GREEK WHO HAD A DART IN HIS EYE.

[A fol. 30*a*. 1; B fol. 57*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her blessing, and her prayer, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man in the Island of Ḳualâsyas who was exceedingly rich, and he set out in a ship with certain Turks(?) to fight against pirates who fell in with him on the sea-coast, and the crew of the pirates shot eleven darts at him, and one of these smote him in the eye, and he became grievously sick and was nigh unto death. Then he said unto his men, "Bring me to my house", and they brought him to his house. [A fol. 30*a*. 2] Now the ten darts which were in his body came out, but the one which was in his eye would not come out, and when they broke it, it left its iron [point] in his eye. And there was in this place a [B fol. 57*a*. 2] certain church which was built in the name of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and she used to work miracles and wonders [therein] and to heal those who were sick; and those who were travelling by sea or by land she was wont to deliver immediately they made entreaty unto her. And the man said, "Carry me to the "house of our Lady MARY, for there is no one that can cure me except "her"; and they carried him thither straightway. And they made an image of wax which resembled him in appearance, and they brought eleven [A fol. 30*b*. 1] darts, and stuck them into it, ten in the members of his body and one in his eye, for thus is the custom of the Greeks. And when a man was wounded either by a spear or [by an arrow from] a bow, they used to bring the spear and make a wound in the wax figure [B fol. 57*b*. 1] similar to that which had been made in the man; and then when they made vows to our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, she used to heal him. So they brought the rich man to the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and he made numerous offerings for the poor and needy, and he gave that which was meet for the church itself. And it came to pass that when our [A fol. 30*b*. 2] holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, saw that the confidence of his heart was in her, she plucked the dart out of his eye and out of the eye of the waxen image in one night; and the eye of the man became once more like its fellow. And it came to pass that when the people saw the eye of the man and that of the figure they marvelled at the greatness of this miracle which our holy Lady, the two-fold [B fol. 57*b*. 2] Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, had wrought, and they praised her exceedingly.

A wax figure of the Greek merchant, with an arrow-head stuck in its eye, is brought into the shrine of the Virgin Mary; when the arrow-head has been withdrawn from the eye of the wax figure, the arrow-head falls out of the eye of the merchant, who is lying prostrate before the shrine, and he stands up.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BLIND GIRL OF DALGÂ.

[A fol. 32*a*. 1; B fol. 33*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE [TWOFOLD] VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man in the country of Upper Egypt who was surnamed Badramân, and whose name was Abraham, and the name of his wife was Gêrâ Anest; and they were exceedingly rich in possessions, and they were perfect in every good work. And they had a daughter whose name was Elisabeth, and besides her they had no other child; and this daughter fell ill of a most loathsome disease in her [A fol. 32*a*. 2] body, that is to say, small-pox, and both her eyes became blind. And when her father and her mother saw the blindness of their daughter's eyes they were bitterly grieved, and they took her round to all [B fol. 33*b*. 2] the physicians and to all those that dealt in magic, but they were not able to cure her. And it came to pass that when the day of the festival of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, that is to say, the twenty-first day of the month Ṭeḳemt[1], had come, her father and her mother took the girl, together with many gifts, and carried her to the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, which was in the country called [A fol. 32*b*. 1] Dalgâ, for the people of that country were wont to celebrate on that day a great festival in honour of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY. Now the mother took her daughter [there] on the twentieth day of the month Ṭeḳemt, and she came into the church and shut the door upon herself, and she stood up before the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and she stretched out her hands in the [B fol. 34*a*. 1] fervour of her heart, and said with bitter tears, "O my Lady, thou mother of mercy, thou gracious intercessor, I take "refuge in thee, and I entreat thee to save my daughter and to open her "eyes." And it came to pass immediately after she had made an end of her [A fol. 32*b*. 2] prayer, that she fell asleep with her daughter under the picture [of the Virgin]. And as the daughter was sleeping with her mother our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, appeared unto the daughter and woke her up without the knowledge of her mother. Then our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who is full of mercy, said unto her, "Open thine eyes", and when she had opened them she blew into them a breath with her pure mouth, and sprinkled upon her from her breasts some drops of her milk of healing and mercy; and straightway her eyes [B fol. 34*a*. 2] were opened. Now our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin [A fol. 33*a*. 1] MARY, appeared unto her apparelled in light which was brighter than that of the Sun, and then she disappeared into the picture. Then the girl woke her mother and told her everything that had happened, and how our holy Lady the Virgin MARY had appeared unto her, and how she had opened her eyes and had disappeared into the picture; and when her mother saw her she rejoiced exceedingly, and she uttered cries in a loud voice. And the overseer of the church heard her as he was baking the bread of the Offering, and he came out to see what had happened, and he found the young woman along with her mother, and she could see; and straightway he marvelled and was astonished, and he gave [A fol. 33*a*. 2] thanks to God Almighty and to the Virgin, the merciful intercessor who gave Him birth. And it came to pass in the morning that all the people were gathered together to the church [B fol. 34*b*. 1], and when they saw this miracle they gave praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and they glorified our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God; and they made a great feast, and they glorified her name exceedingly. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain poor woman [whose husband had died[1]] and had left three daughters; the name of the first was Mary, and that of the second Marthâ, and that of the third Yawâhîta. And their mother was [exceedingly] poor, and lacked even daily bread unless people gave it unto her; and it came to pass that when her three daughters had grown up and were of the proper age to marry no man of that city thought of marrying them because [A fol. 35*a*. 2] of their poverty. Now their mother was exceedingly grieved because of this thing, and she went unto the church of our holy Lady, [B fol. 35*b*. 2] the two-fold Virgin MARY, which was in Ṣenʿâ and is surnamed Tâyadâ, and she wept bitterly and stood up before the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and said, "O Lady, I have brought up these my children until this day, but "behold, I now lack by reason of my poverty the means for giving them "in marriage, and I have no power to do anything whatsoever. O thou "mother of orphans, remove my sorrow." And in that same night [A fol. 35*b*. 1] our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, appeared unto her, and said unto her, "This night I will take thine eldest daughter unto myself "so that she may be with me, for she is a pledge committed unto me. "And as concerning thy other two daughters I will send them unto "Tĕwôg, the blacksmith of the city of Maḳmas, who shall receive them "from thee and shall marry them to his sons". And when the woman had awoke from her sleep [B fol. 36*a*. 1] she believed the words of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY. And after three days the eldest daughter, whose name was Mary, died. And when the people heard that she was dead they [A fol. 35*b*. 2] came to make her ready for burial and to bury her, and they saw that her mother was rejoicing and was not weeping at all. Then one of those who had come to comfort her said unto her, "Why dost thou make strong thine heart and dost not "weep for thy daughter?" And she made known unto them what our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, had said unto her in the vision, and they ascribed praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and unto the Virgin who had given Him birth, the merciful intercessor for the sons of men. And they buried the damsel with great honour. And after a few days Têwôg the blacksmith came from the city of Maḳmas, and took the [A fol. 36*a*. 1] two daughters and gave them in marriage [B fol. 36*b*. 2] unto his sons, and he himself made them his guests for the sake of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who were with Joseph and Salome when they went to the land of Egypt. Now the history of the blacksmith is written in the homily of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, which is read on the sixth day of the month Ḥadâr at the feast of Ḳuesquâm. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Who make their boast in thee, the mother of Israel, Rebecca,

Now those devils which seized upon him did not know their companion, and one of them cried out and said, "Throw this man into perdition"; and the man was dismayed exceedingly and trembled, for he imagined that he was going to be destroyed. And our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, came, and she was arrayed in apparel which was like unto the colour[5] of heaven, and she said unto the devils which were carrying away the man, "Why are ye carrying away this man to perdition, for both he "and his brother were writing the Book of my miracles?" CHAPTER XX.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE OLD MAN ḲAṬÎR.

[A fol. 40*a*. 1; B fol. 39*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was in a certain city called Elksûs a priest who was an old man, and his name was Ḳaṭîr; and he dwelt in the church of our holy Lady the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And in the church was a certain guardian of evil nature who said unto the priest in the church, "Thou dwellest here and yet thou offerest not up the offer-"ing of incense, [A fol. 40*a*. 2] and whatsoever possessions come to the "church thou dost consume; get thee gone and remove thyself from this "place". And the priest said unto him, "O my brother, I am a poor old "man. Canst thou not see my infirmity? Behold, I have ministered in "the church for forty years, and now my [B fol. 39*b*. 1] strength hath "failed me. O my lord, bear thou [with] me by reason of mine infirmity." Now the keeper was exceedingly angry with him. Then the priest answered and said unto him, "Have patience with me for three days, "[after which] the monks of the Monastery of Victor, the son of Hermânôs "(Germanus?), will come, and I will ask them to take me away with "them". Now these monks were in the habit of coming to [the church of] [A fol. 40*b*. 1] Elksûs on the night of the first day of the week with incense and lanterns. And when the priest had said these words he wept exceedingly, and said, "O my holy Lady, thou two-fold Virgin MARY, "it is now a period of forty years during which I have ministered in "thy church, and wilt thou forsake me this day?" And by reason of his abundant weeping he fell asleep. And at midnight our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared [B fol. 40*a*. 1] unto the guardian of the church and, according to the word of the man himself, with her were two men who shone with light. And she said unto him, "Hast thou no mercy? "What hath this poor priest done unto thee that thou shouldst wish to "drive him out of the church, and [A fol. 40*b*. 2] to send him away?" Then straightway she commanded one of [the two men] who stood before her to beat his feet[1], and he did so; and she said unto the guardian, "From this time forward thou shalt be a paralytic, and the priest shall be "healed". And it came to pass that when the morning had come the guardian of the church was powerless [to move], and he was unable to stand up upon his feet; but the aged priest had renewed his health and become strong. Now this thing which had come to pass through our Lady MARY was not known until the guardian himself declared the matter with his own words. And all the people who saw it marvelled exceedingly, and they ascribed blessings unto our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. So the priest continued to minister [B fol. 40*a*. 2] in the sanctuary [A fol. 41*a*. 1], and the guardian continued to be a paralytic until he died. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Thou didst make powerless his feet until he died.

Make thou to be feeble the feet of mine adversaries,
And send thou misery upon my Foe!

The feet are confined by a chain or rope attached at each end to a staff (in Arabic فَلَقَة) which is turned round to tighten it. Two persons stand on each side and strike alternately. CHAPTER XXI.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BRETHREN TÂG AND NAZÎB OF DALGÂ.

[A fol. 42*a*. 1; B fol. 41*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there were two brethren in a certain city which was called Dalgâ; one of them was a priest, and his name was Tâg, and the other was a deacon, and his name was Nazîb. And their handicraft was to dye apparel with indigo colour, and they were good men and kept mercy [in their hearts]. Everyone who came [to visit] the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, which was in that city [A fol. 42*a*. 2], did they bring to pass the night with them in their home, and they gave him the evening meal. And on a certain day a man of evil nature, a Muḥammadan whose name was Akyâtâr, came unto them, and said, "Dye for [B fol. 41*a*. 2] me [these] garments, and I "will give you payment for the same"; and Nazîb took the apparel from the Muḥammadan and dyed it for him, but he took no payment from him. Then the Muslim said unto him, "Ye are good Christians, but ye "will not hearken unto our Prophet". And Nazîb answered and said unto him, "Your Prophet (i. e., Muḥammad) did not come unto us that "we should listen unto him, but our Prophet (i. e., Jesus) did come unto "the Arabs". Then straightway the Muslim rose up and kissed the head of [A fol. 42*b*. 1] Nazîb, and said unto him, "Your testimony is true; our "Prophet only came to the Arabs". And the Muslim departed and made an accusation against him to the Ḳâdî[1], and said unto him, "The Christian

"[Nazîb] hath borne testimony that our Prophet came [only] to the Arabs." Now this he said that he (i. e., Nazîb) might be [made to] become a Muslim. And straightway the Ḳâdî sent messengers and brought [B fol. 41*b*. 2] Nazîb to him, and he beat him with many stripes and he shut him up in prison.

Then his brother Tâg the priest entered into the church and stood up before the image (or picture) of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and wept before her, and said, "Behold, O my Lady, I have served "thee for a very long [A fol. 42*b*. 2] time, and if thou wilt not deliver "my brother then take away my life in death, so that I may not be a "laughing-stock unto men." And he slept that night beneath the image of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and our holy Lady appeared unto him, and said unto him, "Fear not, "neither be thou distressed, for to-morrow morning thy brother shall come "unto thee being still a Christian; and I will deliver him into the care of "Mâr Gîyôrgîs[1] (i. e., Saint George) of Lydda[2]." And in that same night Mâr George [B fol. 41*b*. 2] appeared unto the Ḳâdî with a sharp sword in his hand, and he said unto him, "If thou dost not send back the "Christian this day unto his brother, [A fol. 43*a*. 1] I will cut off thy head." Then straightway the Ḳâdî awoke from sleep in fear and terror, and he made Nazîb to come forth from the prison house quickly by night, and he said unto him, "Get thee gone to thy brother for the sake of this "horseman[3], who appeared unto me holding a sword wherewith to slay "me". And Nazîb said unto him, "O my lord, since thou wilt send me "away, give me a paper [of release for him] written with thine own hand,

Now when the morning had come Nazîb arrived at the church of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, of which we have already spoken, with the paper of release, [B fol. 42*a*. 1; A fol. 43*a*. 2] and he read it to those who were there. And they ascribed praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and they gave thanks unto our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, because she had delivered him from the Muḥammadan. [And his brother Tâg celebrated a great] festival that day to the name of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY who gave birth to God. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE LAME MAN.

with cloth so that people might not know [that he was lame]; and he continued to weep and lament by day and by night without ceasing. And he loved to betake himself early in the morning to the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, [A fol. 44*b*. 2] who gave birth to God, which was in that city, and was decorated with gold, and silver, and precious stones, and hyacinth stone. And it came to pass one day that a great multitude of people were gathered together [B fol. 43*a*. 2] in that church, and the man who had a lame foot came also with them. Now as they were all going out, the Archbishop came and found [him] near the entrance (?) of the church, and he was angry and said, "Who "hath been into this church?" And he said unto the people, "Come "back, all of you, and do not depart"; and they all returned [to the church]. Then again the Archbishop said unto them, "Get ye out, one "at a time", and the [A fol. 45*a*. 1] people did as he had commanded them. And it came to pass that when the people had gone out one by one the man with the lame foot was [the only one] left [there]. And he bowed down before the picture (or image) of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and tears flowed from his eyes, and he wept with a bitter weeping; and straightway his lame foot was loosed and he became whole like [other] men. Now when [B fol. 43*b*. 1] the people saw him they were terrified and held their peace. And the Archbishop beckoned the man [to come to him], and said unto him, "How long hadst thou "been in this state?" And the man replied, "From the time that I came "forth from my mother's womb my foot was in that state, and I used to "wrap it up in linen that the people might [A fol. 45*a*. 2] not know; and "I used to weep by day and by night, and I was always making supplica-"tion unto our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY. Now at the time of the ninth hour of the fourth day of the week he became wearied, and he placed his head in a position wherein he might [A fol. 47*a*. 1] rest himself, and as he was resting he fell asleep straightway; and he saw in a dream that the hand of the picture [or image) of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, touched (or felt) his flesh, and he awoke immediately. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WOMAN WITH A BROKEN FOOT.

[A fol. 48*a*. 1; B fol. 46*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her intercession be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain church in the city of Harlôm (Haarlem), and in it was a painted picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, which people called the "Helper". And there was among the inhabitants of the city a certain poor woman who had broken her foot, and she had nothing whatever of this world's goods to give to a physician to heal her. Then her kinsfolk [A fol. 48*a*. 2] took her up and brought her to that church, and they laid her down before the picture of [B fol. 48*a*. 2] our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and they left her there by herself and departed; and the guardian of the church locked the doors upon her and she remained inside. Now our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, used to come constantly to that church, and to wander up and down therein, and to walk about in it the whole night long; and when the guardians of the church opened the doors about the season of midnight they would find her there in visible form. And it came to pass that, on the night [of the day] whereon they had left [A fol. 48*b*. 1] the woman with the broken [foot] in the church, our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, came there according to her wont, and found her lying before [B fol. 46*b*. 1] her pic-

Sophia, the Abbess of the Monastery of Mount Carmel, having become with child, the Virgin Mary appears to her, and commands one of the two angels who are with her to deliver her, and the other to give the child to a certain man called Felix to rear.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND SOPHIA THE ABBESS OF MOUNT CARMEL.

[A fol. 50*a*. 1; B fol. 47*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain Abbess in the Monastery of Mount Carmel whose name was Sôfyâ (Sophia), who was a God-fearing woman and who was very beautiful in form; and she loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, with her whole heart. And she had under her in that monastery a large number of virgins and women who were devoted to the ascetic life, and the Abbess taught them the rules and ordinances of nuns, [A fol. 50*a*. 2] and strictly admonished them continually not to speak words of lightness and not to be slothful in observing the season[s] of prayer. Now for this reason they used to hate her, [B fol. 47*b*. 2] and they awaited some scandal which should happen in her time so that they might remove her from her position. And there was in the monastery a certain young man who was a servant and who attended to the food and the clothing of the virgins, and Satan was envious of the Abbess and he cast into her heart the desire of the flesh, and she committed fornication with that serving-man and became with child by him. And this thing became manifest unto the nuns and they knew that the Abbess had conceived; and they went and made an accusation against her to the Bishop, whose name was Abbâ Severus, [A fol. 50*b*. 1] and informed him that the Abbess had become with child. Now when the Bishop had heard [this] he sent messengers unto the Abbess, [saying] that the virgins were to be gathered together on a certain day, [and that he would come] to inspect them; and when the Abbess heard the words of the messenger she was [B fol. 48*a*. 1] terrified, and she knew that the virgins had laid an accusation against her. Then she went quickly into the church and bowed down before the picture (or image) of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And she wept with a bitter weeping and with a burning heart, and she said, "O thou who lovest "mercy and compassion, make soft thine heart [A fol. 50*b*. 2] towards thy "sinful handmaiden who hath been entrapped in a snare, and shew loving-"kindness unto her; and do away with the wickedness which I bear in "my womb, and put me not to open shame, O my Lady." Now through the abundance of her weeping [she became weary] and fell asleep, and she saw in her sleep that our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, came unto her, and that with her there were two angels. And she said unto the Abbess, "Be not thou sorrowful, for behold, I have made supplication "to my Son to forgive thee thy sin [B fol. 48*a*. 2]; only thou must never "repeat the sin." Then our holy Lady the Virgin MARY said unto those angels, "Take ye away the child which is in her womb, and give it unto "[A fol. 51*a*. 1] a man whose name is Pilkes (Felix), so that he may take "it under his protection and suckle it, for he possesseth much cattle." And the angels did as our Lady had commanded them. Then the Abbess awoke from her sleep, and felt her womb, and did not find the child there; and she gave thanks unto our Lady MARY, the two-fold Virgin, who gave birth to God, with her whole heart because of the miracle which she had wrought for her, and she went forth to her work according to her wont.

And it came to pass that the Bishop arrived in his appointed season, [B fol. 48*b*. 1] and he entered into the abode of the virgins, and the Abbess met him, having with her [A fol. 51*a*. 2] one of those who had made an accusation against her. Then the Bishop asked the Abbess how it was that she had become with child by fornication, and she denied it, saying, "I have not done this thing". And the Bishop commanded the oldest of the women to examine the Abbess and to find out whether she was with child or not; and when they had done so they did not find a trace of conception in her womb, and they thought that she was a virgin who had never known man. Then they told the Bishop this thing and he did not believe them, but thought that, having taken a bribe from the Abbess, they were concealing her transgression for her. And the Bishop rose up, [A fol. 51*b*. 1; B fol. 48*b*. 2] and with him there were priests, and deacons, and women who were devoted to the ascetic life, and they examined the womb of the Abbess, but they did not find a child therein. Then straightway the Bishop repented with a great repentance because he had reproached the Abbess without just cause, and he turned to those virgins who had made the accusation against the Abbess, and was wroth with them because they had accused her of shameful conduct.

Now when the Abbess saw that the Bishop was angry she was afraid lest those virgins would be dismissed and sent away and led into captivity by Satan through her. And straightway she rose up [A fol. 51*b*. 2] and said unto all the people, "Depart ye for a season from the "Bishop"; and she told him all her transgression, and confessed openly unto him what she had done in secret. And besides this she told him how our holy Lady the two-fold Virgin MARY, [B fol. 25*a*. 1] who gave birth to God, had appeared unto her, and how the two angels had taken the child from her womb, and how they had given him unto a certain man to be suckled and reared. Now when the Bishop had heard these things from the Abbess he marvelled exceedingly, and he sent a message unto the man, whose name was Felix and who was concerned in the miracle, to come and bring the child with him; and Felix [A fol. 52*a*. 1] came and brought the child with him. And it came to pass when he had arrived that the Bishop questioned him closely about the child, and Felix told him, saying, "Two young men of most beautiful appearance came unto "me and said, 'Our Lady MARY saith unto thee, Take this child, and "'keep him with thee, and suckle him and rear him'; then they gave me "the child and disappeared from me, [B fol. 25*a*. 2] and behold, this is the "child." And when the Bishop had heard him he marvelled greatly, and he took the child and kept him in his own house, and he provided him with everything which was required by a child of his age. And when the boy had grown up he taught him the Psalms [A fol. 52*a*. 2] of David, and read to him the books of the saints; and the Holy Spirit came upon him in abundance, and the love of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, was with him in full measure. Now after the death of Abbâ Severus the Bishop they appointed the young man bishop in his stead, and seated him upon [his] throne; and he was a good shepherd all the days of his life until he died in peace. Now there was a certain man in the country of Fenḳê whose name was Bârôk; and he was a depraved man and did no good work of any kind whatsoever, and all the people hated him. But he loved our holy Lady the Virgin MARY with a ready heart and a determined mind, and he used to keep the fast of Naḥasse[1] because of his love for her, and on the festival of her departure [from this world] he rejoiced exceedingly. And he was wont to make a feast for [A fol. 53*b*. 2] the poor, and the needy, and the old, and the young, both male and female. Now one day certain men who hated him found him on the highway, and [bruised him with stones], and beat him and wounded him with sticks, until his body [B fol. 26*b*. 2] was a mass of bruised and bleeding flesh, but they were not able to drive his soul out of him, and then they smote him sorely with swords, but he did not die. Then Bârôk said unto them, "Even though "ye cut my flesh into little pieces I shall not die, for my Lady MARY will "keep guard over me, and she will be watching over me at all times, and "will deliver me out of your hands"; and when they had heard his words they all took to flight. Then Bârôk made his way to the priest and received the Holy Mysteries, and at that moment the light of life rose [A fol. 54*a*. 1] upon him and he died. And our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, received his soul and placed it in the [Garden of] joy, and those who had beaten him repented with tears and sorrow [and turned] to our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND ANASTASIUS THE ROMAN.

[A fol. 56*a*. 1; B fol. 27*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man in the city of Rome whose name was Anastasius, and he feared God and loved our holy Lady, the twofold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And he used to visit the church of our Lady, the Mother of mercy, and make pure first-fruit offerings unto her, and pay honour unto her with gifts and salutations, saying, "Rejoice, O thou Virgin undefiled who hast [A fol. 56*a*. 2] given "birth unto Emmanuel! Hail to thee, O thou who art full of grace, for "thou hast given birth unto the Light which is before all others! Rejoice, "O thou who hast given birth unto our Redeemer! Rejoice, O holy "Virgin, O thou who hast given birth to Christ, who didst bring Him into "the world without union with man! Therefore shall the nations bow "down and adore thee, O thou who didst give birth to our Light! I be"seech thee to be for me a mediator between me and thy Son." And in this wise used he to pray in the church at the time when the heavenly Offering was being made, and at the time of the five joys of our Lady MARY.

And it came to pass a short time after these things that the deacon fell sick, and was nigh unto death, and the angel of death [A fol. 56*b*. 1] struck fear into his soul. Then our Lady [B fol. 27*b*. 2] MARY, the storehouse of mercy, the blessed Virgin, the joy of Christian folk, who sheweth favour unto kings, the mistress of the angels, and the crown of the martyrs, appeared unto the deacon, and said unto him, "Why fearest thou with so "great a fear? And why art thou dismayed? For when thou wast in good "health thou didst greet me joyfully each and every day. And now, fear "not, O my beloved, and let not thine heart be terrified, for no evil thing "shall draw nigh unto thy body, and thou shalt not be dismayed at [the "coming of] the angel of death; and as thou didst not cease [to praise "me] with thy mouth, and didst greet me with joy, so likewise [A fol. "56*b*. 2] thou shalt find joy [with me], and shalt be with me in Paradise "for ever". And when the deacon heard these words he found peace, and he thought that he would recover from his sickness. Then he awoke from his sleep and found his soul in great joy and gladness; and immediately he awoke he died, and his soul went forth from his body. And our pure Lady MARY received it in her hands, and it entered with her into the Garden of joy and unto the place of delight and pleasure, where it would neither perish nor come to an end for ever. May the prayer of our Lady give him help and make him to be girded about with power; and may it make him to be free [A fol. 57*a*. 1] from the opposition of the wicked and from the hosts of the enemy, and from the pointed [arrow of] the bow, and from the sharp spear! O storehouse of mercy, take thou under the protection of thy prayer the soul of thy beloved one, our king David, for ever and ever! Amen.

O MARY, thou ark of God, who dost protect me continually,
Thou refined gold of holiness unalloyed with silver,

Thy servant Anastasius was lying grievously tormented by his sickness;
As thou didst announce unto him glad tidings and didst make him to rejoice by [thy] words,
Make thou me to hear continually the glad tidings of peace.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE MONK OF THE MONASTERY OF ABBÂ SAMUEL OF ḲALMÂN.

[A fol. 58*a*. 1; B fol. 28*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was in the great and holy Monastery of Abbâ Samuel of Ḳalmân a beautiful church [which had been built] in the name of our pure and holy Lady MARY, and in this holy church, in the west wall thereof, was a great and wonderful statue [of her]. And in this famous Monastery there lived a certain holy man who had stablished in his heart and mind the salutation [A fol. 58*a*. 2] of the angel Gabriel unto our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, and it never ceased to be in his mouth and on his tongue. And he rested neither by night nor by day from reciting salutations to the holy Virgin MARY, and he placed his confidence in her, [and believed] that she would save him [when he should enter] into the presence of her beloved Son. He neither fasted nor prayed, and he made himself to appear to be foolish and weak of understanding, so that the [other] monks might not know concerning his strivings and labours; and he used to act in such a way that the monks treated him with contempt—

now this was an unseemly thing for monks to do—when they went out from the church. In the morning, at the time when the sun was rising, he ate a few [wild] herbs and beans, and to every one [A fol. 58*b*. 1] who spake with this monk he appeared to be mad. And he ate nothing from this time until the same hour of the morrow of that day when he again ate in the presence of the monks; and this he was wont to do daily. Now when the monks saw him acting in this wise, the matter was hard unto them, and they were exceedingly sorry for him. And this monk, who hath been mentioned above, did not receive the Holy Mysteries except on three days in each year, that is to say, on the Festival of the blessed Nativity, on the Festival of the holy Epiphany, and on the Festival of the precious Passover. Now our honourable and holy fathers, the teachers of the Church, have commanded [A fol. 58*b*. 2] that the Offering shall be [offered up] on these days of festivals of the Son at the sound of cock-crow in the night. And it came to pass that, when the monks saw him eating each day in the morning before the prayer of the third hour of the day, and knew nothing of his fasting and of how he was wont to fast until the morrow of the day when at the time of the same hour he ate [again], they imagined that he ate at the ordinary times throughout the day, and did not keep the ordinance of the monks, and they murmured greatly against him among themselves. And when the day of the festival of the nativity of our pure Lady, the Virgin MARY, which is on the first day of the month Genbôt[1], had come—now the day of the nativity of the woman who saved the whole world [fell that year] upon [A fol. 59*a*. 1] the day of the blessed First day of the week—the monks were gathered together in the church to be present at the honourable consecration of the Offering for the celebration of the festival. And there sat with them the holy father who was called Abbâ Isaac, and he was the Abbot of the monastery, and the father confessor and prior, and he saw the monk of whom we have already spoken with a few lupin seeds which had been soaked in water, in his hand, and he wished to eat them. Then the Abbot said unto the monks, "Seize ye this monk and take from "him these lupin seeds which he hath in his hand, and let two [A fol. "59*a*. 2] of the brethren bring him into the church and keep guard over "him until the service of consecration be ended—if it be possible for us "to offer up the Holy Offering. Peradventure this evil habit shall be re-"moved from him by the prayer of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, "and he shall walk in the way of the monks with the keeping of fasts "and prayer." Then the monks did according as the Abbot had commanded them, and they took the lupin seeds from his hand with rude violence; and straightway the monk was enraged with those who had laid hold upon him, and he became like a madman. And when they had brought him to the church he said unto the monks who were to keep guard over him, "O my brethren, [A fol. 59*b*. 1] will ye not hearken unto "the voice of your father concerning me? I am a poor and wretched "man, take me unto the picture of our Lady so that I may entreat her "to accept the prayer of our Abbot, and so that all my hunger may be re-"moved from me little by little." And they told him they would consent to do so, and they went with him to the eikôn of the Virgin, and he performed bowings of adoration before her, and said, "O thou who dost "save the penitent, O thou who art the hope of the poor and needy, O "thou who art the helper of the oppressed, deliver thou me from these "monks, for I cannot fast until the time of the Offering." And it came to pass when the [two brethren] heard these words from him they laughed within themselves, and heaped derision upon him. Now when our compassionate Lady [A fol. 59*b*. 2] knew that the whole body of the monks were murmuring against him, and that they were laughing at him and treating him with contempt, she put into his heart the good thought that she would make manifest unto the other monks her mighty and marvellous acts, and the faith of the monk, and the confidence which he had placed in her.

Now at the time when the service of consecration was half through, when every man had brought his mind into a fit state and collected his thoughts to hear the holy prayer of sanctification, the monk drew nigh unto the west wall of the church, wherein was [placed] the picture of the Virgin, and stood up before it, and lifted up his eyes and said unto her, "O my Lady, peradventure thou dost receive [my] prayer, [A fol. 60*a*. 1] "and dost accept [my] supplication and the salutation of the angel "[Gabriel], wherewith I have saluted thee without ceasing by day and by "night. I am a poor and wretched man and a sinner, and only God and "thou thyself have any knowledge of me. I have thought that thou wouldst "deliver me on the Day of Judgment before thy Son, and if thou wilt "deliver me before thy Son, then deliver me from these monks; for [all "men] know that whosoever putteth his trust in thee shall neither be put "to shame nor perish before thy beloved Son." Then with power and faith he girded himself about, and he took off his skull cap from his head and smote therewith [A fol. 60*a*. 2] the western wall [of the church], and said, "O might of the Virgin MARY, deliver me." And it came to pass that when he had spoken in this wise, in that same hour the wall was rent asunder, and having cast his skull cap from his hand into the middle of the church he passed out quickly through the opening in the wall. Now when he had gone out the wall closed up again, with the exception of a small opening which was large enough for a man to put his hand into, and this remained as a memorial and a testimony of the miracle which the pure Virgin MARY had wrought; and when the monks saw what had taken place they marvelled with a great astonishment. Then the monks went out to look for the man in all the desert places round about, and in the caves and hollows of the ground, [A fol. 60*b*. 1] but they found no trace of him. And straightway they sorrowed with a great sorrow and their hearts were pained, and their Abbot was exceedingly harsh [towards them] because of the things which they had been accustomed to do unto him. For, when in times past they had been in the habit of seeing him every day at dawn, some of them cursed him, and some buffeted him, and some spat in his face, and some laughed, and some derided him. Now when they saw this wonderful thing they recognized the righteousness, and the strivings of the monk, and how he had loved our Lady the Virgin MARY in his heart, and how he had put his confidence in her, even as they had heard from him [A fol. 60*b*. 2] when he departed through the opening in the wall. And they knew also of a certainty that the heartfelt prayer of a pure and sincere mind is better and more honourable than the prayer of the tongue, even as our Lord saith in the Holy Gospel[1], "When thou risest up to pray enter into "thy chamber, and shut thy door, and pray unto thy Father in secret." Now the interpretation of this [verse] is "Collect thy mind in thy heart"[2], and in that it saith, "Shut thy door", thou must shut thy mouth and pray with thine heart. For the prayer of the heart in a mind which is sincere and collected is better than the prayer of the tongue when the mind is wandering about and going unto another place. It is meet for a man to pray with his heart, [A fol. 61*a*. 1] and not with his tongue [only], even as this monk was wont to do at all times, although no one knew about it.

And it came to pass that when the monks saw what had happened, they went to the Bishop, and told him all these things. Now when the Father, the Bishop, had heard thereof, he sent and informed the Archbishop concerning what he had heard and seen in the matter of the skull cap, which the monk had thrown into the church, and concerning the miracle which had taken place through it. Now when the Archbishop had heard these things he rejoiced greatly, and he sent to the holy monastery of Abbâ Samuel asking for the skull cap of the monk, so that he might obtain [A fol. 61*a*. 2] a blessing therefrom: but the monks would not send it to him, for they thought that he would lay it up in his own house as a thing to be kept there for safety. So they placed the skull cap in the chest of the church as a memorial of the miracle which the Lady of us all, the Virgin MARY, had wrought. Now that the Bishop might prepare the way the Archbishop sent a message unto him [telling him] to go to the Monastery of Ḳalmân and to bring the skull cap [to him], that he might be blessed thereby. And the Bishop obeyed the command of the Archbishop, and went to the Monastery, and he took the skull cap of the monk from out of the chest [which held] the property of the church, and he obtained a blessing therefrom. Then he went to the wall which [A fol. 61*b*. 1] had been rent asunder, and he obtained a blessing also from the opening which was left [there]; and he bowed down in adoration before the picture of our Lady MARY three times, and received a blessing therefrom. Then the Bishop anointed himself with the oil of the lamp which was kept burning before the picture, and departed from the Monastery. Now when he had journeyed a little way on his road, and had arrived in the desert, he sought for the skull cap and found it not; and having turned back forthwith and come to the Monastery a second time, he found it in the place wherein it had been formerly and whence he had taken it. Then he took the skull cap a second time, and laid it between the folds of his apparel, and he tied it securely thereto with leather thongs (?). And when he had journeyed a little way he untied the thongs (?), and unfastened his apparel, [A fol. 61*b*. 2] and found it not; then he turned back to the Monastery a third time and found the skull cap [there]. And he took it out of the chest and fastened it inside the covering of his cross; and having taken it in his hand, he went a little way on his road, but when he opened the covering he found it not. Now when he had turned back to the Monastery a fourth time and found the skull cap there, he knew that God did not wish it to go forth from the holy Monastery of Abbâ Samuel. And the report of this thing was heard in all the borders, and in all the countries and cities round about. Glory be to God Who chose MARY the Virgin to be the mother of His Son Jesus Christ; and thanks be [A fol. 62*a*. 1] unto His Only Son Who put on flesh of her in becoming the new man; and adoration be unto the Holy Spirit who purified her from all unchastity. May her blessing be with our king David, and may she make him to have an inheritance in the prayers of Jerusalem the holy place, the city of his fathers, of the prophets, and of David the Psalmist, and of Solomon the king! And may she make him to see Bethlehem wherein she bowed herself to bring forth the Child of the Spirit Who was conceived without the seed of man! And may she then baptize him in the waters of the Jordan, wherein the Fire of the Godhead was baptized by the hand of the son of the barren woman, John! And may she make him to salute the mountains of Quarantania[1], [A fol. 62*a*. 2] wherein our Lord fasted and vanquished the Devil! And may she cause his royal tabernacle to be planted on the Mount of Olives, where our Lord went up and blessed [His disciples] with His holy hands! And may she make his habitation to rest on Mount Zion, where the disciples drank of the flood of fire, the Paraclete! And may He establish him in such wise that he shall stand on his feet, and make vows and pay adoration, and pray, and make supplication at Gethsemane, the grave of His beloved one, the Virgin MARY, the merciful intercessor, the green thorn-bush, for ever and ever! Amen and Amen.

O MARY, who without stroke of hammer, or blow of chisel, Didst cleave a wall of dry stone when there passed out into the desert
The man with whom thou wast well pleased, who was called Shâlûsa,

[1] I. e., the desert where our Lord fasted forty days.

Cleave thou the back of mine enemy, and the belly of him that hateth me,
And take thou [in thine hand] a new sword.

The following is the version of this miracle according to the MS. B:—

[B fol. 28*b*. 1] Now there was a certain man in the Monastery of Ḳalmân who had stablished in his mouth and heart the salutation of the angel [Gabriel, and who recited it always] before the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And this man did not receive the Offering except [during the festivals of] the Epiphany, and the Nativity, and Easter, and on the day of the festival of our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God. Now the monks saw him holding [in his hands] some beans which had been soaked in water and which he wished to eat; and straightway they laid hold upon him and took him into the church [B fol. 28*b*. 2]. And he came in before the picture of our Lady, and said unto her, "Deliver thou me from the wick-"edness of these monks"; now he was unable to fast, and they were making a laughing-stock of him. And he said, "I have taken refuge be-"fore thy picture, surely thou wilt deliver me". Then he took his skull cap, and smote therewith the west wall, and said, "O my holy Lady, "thou two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, deliver me". And immediately the wall was rent asunder, and he went out [through it], and [as he was going] he cast his skull cap [back into the church]; then the wall which had been rent asunder closed up, and became as it was formerly, with the exception of a small opening which was wide enough for the hand to enter, and which was left as a memorial [of what had happened]. Now when the monks saw this they marvelled, for when they sought for the monk they could not find him; and they and their Abbot Isaac sorrowed with a great sorrow [B fol. 29*a*. 1]. And when the Bishop heard this, he rejoiced and went to the wall which had been rent asunder, and he bowed down before it; and he anointed himself with the oil of the lamp which was burning [before the picture]. Now this thing was heard of throughout all the borders of Egypt. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḥâyla Maryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE VIRGIN AND THE CANNIBAL OF THE CITY OF ḴĔMER.

[A fol. 63*b*. 1; B fol. 30*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man in the city of Ḳĕmer, and he was of noble race and was, in name, a Christian. And his sin was very great, and indeed, it exceeded that of all other men, for he did not eat [ordinary] food and the flesh of oxen, but he lived upon human flesh. Now when this cannibal had devoured eight and seventy people, his friends, and his acquaintances, and his kinsfolk, and the people who were in his service [A fol. 63*b*. 2] began to come to an end, and the men who remained fled from him so that he might not be able to devour them; and he was left alone with his wife and his two children, and them also he ate. And it came to pass one day as he was walking along that he found a certain husbandman on the road, and he lay in wait [B fol. 30*a*. 2] for him and followed him; and when he knew that he would be too strong for him he left him and departed. And as he was going away he said unto him, "Sell me "an ox, and behold, I will give thee my bow which is ornamented with gold; "take [it]". And the husbandman said unto him, "I refuse it wholly, for "money and food are more useful to me; I will not give thee [the ox]".

Then the cannibal spake unto him a second time and said, "I will give "thee in addition arrows"; but the husbandman refused [to accept them] [A fol. 64*a*. 2]. And again the cannibal said unto him, "Shew me, I pray, "thy cave wherein thou dwellest". Then the husbandman said unto him, "Behold [it] close by thee. Dost not thou thyself dwell in the habitations "of men?" And he refused [to shew him his dwelling], and departed. Then again the husbandman said unto him; "Thou art of noble family, "but thy heart is depraved, and full of guile, and thou appearest to be "like unto a rich man who hath his abode in the city of Ḳĕmer". And the cannibal said unto him, "Why dost thou compare me with such an "one, O my brother?"

Then the cannibal took some water in a vessel, and as he was going along the road he found a certain poor beggar whose whole body [B fol. 30*b*. 1] was covered with the sores and scabs of leprosy; and he wished he could eat the poor man, but he did not like him because of his sores which were putrefying and which stank exceedingly. Now the beggar was thirsty, and he begged some water from the cannibal, and said unto him, "Give me some water to drink, for God's sake"; but the cannibal became greatly enraged, and heaped abuse upon him. Then the beggar begged again for water from him for the sake of heaven and earth, and for the sake of the martyrs and the righteous men; and the cannibal refused [to give him any]. And the beggar begged from him a third time, and said unto him, "In the name of MARY, give me water to drink "before my soul depart". Then the cannibal said unto him, "Verily, from "my youth up, I have heard that she saveth [men] by her prayers, there-"fore I myself will take refuge in her". And he said to the beggar, "Take, "and drink, [A fol. 64*b*. 1] for MARY's sake"; but when only a little water had gone down his throat, that is to say about a handful, the cannibal seized him and stopped him from drinking before he was able to satisfy his thirst. Then the cannibal died, and the angels of darkness [B fol. 55*b*. 2] took his soul, and cast it into Sheol. And our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, came unto the Son of God and said, "Have compassion upon me, O my Son". And He said unto her, "What "good thing hath he done for thee?" And she said unto him, "He gave "a thirsty man water to drink in my name". Then the Lord said, [A fol. 64*b*. 2] "Bring forth the scales and weigh the souls which he hath de-"voured against the water which he gave the thirsty man to drink"; and they weighed them, and the little drop of water outweighed the eight and seventy souls. And the angels of light who were looking on marvelled, and they gave shouts of joy because the cannibal had been saved and was made to live through the entreaty of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, through Whom all things come to pass. CHAPTER XXX.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WIDOW'S SON WHO BECAME A THIEF.

[A fol. 66*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her intercession be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

I. The son of a pious widow falls into bad company, and steals goods from a house.

III. His mother appeals to the Virgin Mary for help.
IV. The Virgin Mary appears and releases the young man from the gallows.

Now there was a certain poor widow who had one son, and besides him she had no other child. And every day she used to come to the church and stand up before the picture (or image) of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and say, "O my Lady, I commit this my son "unto thy safe keeping, so that thou mayest guard him, for I have no "other child besides him"; [A fol. 66 a. 2] and thus she used to pray daily. And it came to pass that when her son had grown up, and had become a young man, he fell into the company of thieves and became a robber. Now after a little time [the watchmen] seized that young man, together with the other thieves who were with him, and brought them before the magistrate of the city; and he passed the sentence of doom upon them, and they crucified them according to the law of their city. And the mother of the young man did not know that all this had happened unto her son, and as she was going into the gates of the church the people told her, and said unto her, "Knowest thou not that they have crucified "thy son together with the other thieves?" And she said unto them, [A fol. 66 b. 1] "I did not know it". And forthwith she cried out with a loud cry and wept bitterly, and [she went and] stood up before the picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and she lifted up her eyes, and said, "Where is he whom I com- "mitted into thy safe keeping? Where is the pledge which I deposited "with thee, O my Lady? Behold, they have seized my son, together with "the other thieves, and they have crucified him. So now, if thou wilt not "deliver my son and save him, I will snatch thy Son out of thy bosom". And at that moment there was a great outcry [A fol. 66 b. 2], and many people came thronging into the church through the gates. Now when the woman heard the outcry, she turned and [looked] behind her, and she saw her son coming in with the people, and she ran and embraced him. Then the people who were gathered together said unto him, "What "hath happened unto thee? And how wast thou saved?" And the young man said unto them, "When they had suspended me upon the wood, "and were about to drive the nails into me, there came unto me a certain "woman, who was most beautiful in form, and who was shining with light "that was brighter than that of the sun, and she held back the nails so "that they did not touch my flesh. Then she took me down from upon "the wood, and said unto me, 'Get thee to the church, and to thy mother, "'for she wisheth to snatch my Son from my bosom in thy stead'". Then the people ascribed praise and glory unto God, the Glorious and Most High, and they gave thanks unto our holy Lady, the [two-fold] Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And the woman and her son ministered in the church of our holy Lady, the [two-fold] Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, until their death. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

In the MS. B. the narrative of this Miracle is much shorter and runs thus:—

[fol. 32*a*. 1 and 2]. It is said that there was a certain man who was a thief and a robber of churches, and that inasmuch as he was a man of evil habit and life he stole things from them daily; and all the people were lying in wait [to catch him]. And it came to pass one day that he carried off some of the possessions of our Lady MARY according to his wont, and the people caught that thief, and beat him, and bound him in fetters and chains, and then they thought that they would take away his life(?). And he said, "I place my trust in our holy Lady, the two-fold "Virgin MARY, for whosoever believeth in her prayers shall be saved "from all sorrow". Then she appeared openly unto the men who had beaten him, and had laid hands upon him that they might take away his life, and she said unto them, "Release him"; and they released him by the command of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and set him free from his fetters; and all the people marvelled at her mercy. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with her servant Ḫayla Mâryâm, for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE LADY EUPHEMIA.

[A fol. 67*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY. May the blessing of her prayer, and the gift of her help be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain woman in the city of Sâměr whose name was Euphemia, and she was stricken in years and lived in deep poverty. And she had one son, and besides him she had no other child, either son or daughter; and she loved this son exceedingly, and with her very soul. Each day, without fail, she was wont to go to the church of our Lady MARY with her son, whose name was Philemon, and pray to her [A fol. 67*b*. 1] for him, that she would take his soul under her protection, and would keep him from all evil, and would deliver him from all the distress which is planted in this world. And she used to pray continually in the church, and she never failed to go there, and to pray on behalf of her son and to make supplication [for him] with a ready heart. And it came to pass that when Philemon, the son of the poor old woman, was moved by hunger and want of apparel[1], and poverty found him, and he came to be in want, he joined himself unto a company of thieves and robbers. And one day when he was plundering the house of a certain rich man in the city of Alexandria, together with the thieves who were his companions, the menservants of the house of the rich man heard the noise of [A fol. 67*b*. 2] their feet on the third floor above, and they made an outcry. Then the people of the city [came] to their help, and they seized Philemon, and the thieves, and they brought an accusation against him, and then they hanged him upon a fig tree; and he remained hanging there for three days and three nights, without eating food or drinking water. Now at the end of the three days they told his mother. And it came to pass that when she heard this she cried out with a loud voice, and she [went] to the church, and called upon the name of our Lady MARY, and said unto her, "Behold, my son whom I committed to thy care hath been "cast away, [A fol. 68*a*. 1] and he hath been destroyed for nought. Now "therefore, give me back my son and redeem thou him by the might of "thy Son; now if thou lovest my son thou canst deliver him, for thou hast "the power to do whatsoever thou wishest. "O thou who art full of grace, God, in Whom there is neither division "nor diminution, is with thee, and by the power of Jesus Christ thy beloved "Son our Lord thou hast the power and might [so to do]. Now there- "fore, O my Lady, if thou wilt not make my son Philemon to come back, "and wilt not bring him to me here, where shall I be able to find him? "And in that I have committed him unto thy care I shall have destroyed "mine own son, in mine own lifetime. And behold, I will take thy Son out "of thy bosom in the place of mine own son Philemon". these words, [A fol. 68*b*. 1] she set out to go to the image of our Lady MARY and perform that which she had imagined in her mind.

And straightway, on that same day, MARY took a strong rod in the form of a pole, on the top whereof was a curved knife (or scythe), and cut off the branch of the fig tree upon which the son of the widow was hanging, and she released him from his fetters. Then the young man rose up forthwith, and went and journeyed on among the crowd of people, and arrived speedily at the church. Now his mother heard the noise of the multitudes of people as they were coming in through the door of the church, and when she turned [A fol. 68*b*. 2] and saw her son among the people who were crowding each other to enter in through the door of the church, she ran unto him, like a woman who had gone mad by reason of her exceedingly great joy at the sight of her son. And she grasped him with her hands, like a savage lioness, and she embraced his neck, and kissed his mouth, and said unto him, "O my son, tell me "where thou hast been. Behold, for three days and three nights I have "been dying for a sight of thy face; oh, I beseech thee to tell me where "thou hast been. Who hath given thee bread to eat? Who hath given "thee water to drink? O my son, tell me". Then [A fol. 69*a*. 1] her son cried out with a loud voice before the people, and said, "Behold, I have "been hanging for three days and three nights upon a fig tree, but our "Lady MARY fed me with heavenly food, and gave me to drink of the "water of life. And moreover, she brought me down from the fig tree, "and sent me away, and said unto me, Go unto thy mother in peace". And it came to pass that when the people who were there, that is to say men, and women, and children, and old men, and young men, and children, and old women, heard this, they glorified God and [A fol. 69*a*. 2] ascribed unto Him great praise. And they praised our Lady MARY exceedingly, and likewise gave thanks unto her, and they sang unto the Word of God hymns and praises, and they cried unto Him joyfully, and shouted with gladness in honour of our Lady MARY, because of the wonderful and miraculous thing which she had wrought.

And it came to pass that when the Bishop, Abbâ Benyâmî, heard these praises and glorifyings of MARY, he called unto all the people and made them come unto him, and then he enquired concerning the youth and his mother, and concerning the miracle which our Lady MARY had made manifest that day. Then he took the youth and his mother and established them [A fol. 69*b*. 1] in his own house, and because of the honour in which he held the pure Virgin MARY he appointed unto them their daily food, and their apparel, until he died. May the blessing of her prayer be with our king David, both in this world and in that which is to come, for ever and ever! Amen.

O thou beautiful mother of the King Who redeemed us,
As thou didst aforetime deliver the widow's son who was a thief,
So, O MARY the Virgin, mayest thou earnestly desire my deliverance!
May mine enemy [be turned away] until he gnasheth with his teeth,
And send thou against him a devil which shall torture him.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WOMAN WHO WAS ABOUT TO BRING FORTH.

[A fol. 70*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY. May the blessing of her prayer be with her beloved one, our king David, for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain city wherein a church had been built, and this church was built in the name of the Archangel Michael, and each year, on the twelfth day of the month Ḫadâr, which is the day of the festival of the Archangel Michael, great numbers of the people [of the city] did not fail to visit his church (May his intercession and his supplication keep our king David [A fol. 70*b*. 2] from the evil Enemy!). And behold, it came to pass one day when the people were travelling along the road to come to that church, that a mighty roaring rush of waters [came] from the sea, which burst upon the people and terrified and alarmed them exceedingly, and drove their senses[1] out of them; and the waves thereof surrounded that place and rose to a height of about two measures, and the people were wellnigh drowned. Then each and every one among them made supplication unto God, and every man sought out a means whereby he might save himself, and they took to flight and ran away from before the billows of the sea, so that they might not be drowned by the waves, according to that which was wont to happen. And behold, there was [A fol. 71*a*. 1] a certain woman travelling with them who was with child, and her time for bringing forth was nigh, and she was unable to run away with them; and she cried out unto those who had forsaken her and fled, but no man turned back to have regard unto her, and she found none to help her and despaired utterly of obtaining any help from man. Then she cried out with tears unto God, the Most High, and unto our Lady MARY, the storehouse of compassion and mercy, who calleth every one unto the love of her beloved Son, the Redeemer of the world. And it came to pass that when those who had taken to flight arrived at the seashore, they stretched out their hands, [A fol. 71*a*. 2] and turned their eyes upwards unto God in heaven, and they made supplication unto our Lady MARY with great outcry, and with much weeping, and with lamentation. And the waves of the sea stood [still] by the power of the billows thereof, and our Lady MARY brought tidings of hope and joy unto the woman, and covered her with her garments, and hid her from the sight of the sea; and it seemed to the woman that she was in a house which was [well] built and furnished. Then, whilst she was in the midst of the sea, the pains of childbirth laid hold upon her, and our Lady MARY took the child from her womb; and she gave birth to a fine boy. And his mother called the boy [A fol. 71*b*. 1] "Abrâskîrôspâs", [a name which means] in Greek and in Hebrew, "The hand of MARY hath touched him and blessed him in the womb of his "mother". Now neither pain nor blood came to his mother [when she brought him forth]. And it came to pass that, when the sea returned into its wonted place, and the waters thereof became quiet, and the waves went down, the woman went forth from it carrying her child in her arms. Now when the people saw her many of them marvelled and were made speechless, by reason of the greatness of the wonderful and miraculous thing [which had happened]; and they all ran and followed after her. And when they had come up with her, they asked her questions, and she related unto them this great and wonderful miracle which [A fol. 71*b*. 2] MARY, the mother of life, the vessel of prophecy, had wrought, and she told them how she had hidden her beneath the dark masses of water so that she should not suffer death. And those who heard this story, men, and women, and children, and old folk, and young men, and babes, and Jew and Gentile, and all the people of the world, marvelled exceedingly, and they gave thanks unto the God of righteousness, and they multiplied the praises of our Lady MARY, who worketh miracles without number, whose beauty of goodness is without measure, and whose rule is beneficent and hard to explain. May her prayer deliver our king David [A fol. 72*a*. 1] from the wrath of her Son for ever and ever! Amen.

As thou didst cover over with [thy] garments the woman who was with child, and who was among The terrible waves of the sea, at the hour of her bringing forth and bearing a son,

Even so cover thou me over, and let not my need be too hard for me,
O my Lady MARY, who didst receive me into thy care from the womb,
With vestments of light and not of skin.

In the MS. B the story is much shorter, and reads:—[fol. 58 a. 1 and 2].

Now there was a certain woman who was with child, and whose hour for bringing forth had well-nigh come. And as she was journeying [along the road to go] to the church of Saint Michael, to keep the feast together with many other people, they heard the roar of the waves of the sea as it came rushing when it was as yet a distance of three measures away. And the people were afraid and fled, and the woman was left alone because she was unable to run away with them, and none of them turned back to her. Then she cried out to our Lady MARY, and said, "O my Lady, [save me] from being drowned in this "flood of waters". And our Lady MARY came, and hid her with her mantle, and she gave birth to her child, without pain and without suffering, and not one drop of the water of the sea touched her; and the waters went back within their bounds, and the woman came forth, together with her son, [unhurt]. Then those who had forsaken her enquired of her, and she related unto them how this thing had happened unto her; and they rejoiced with great joy and glorified God, and gave thanks unto our Lady MARY, who doeth wondrous things and worketh miracles. And [his mother] called the child "Abreskîrôspôs", that is to say, "The "hand of MARY hath touched him". May her prayer, etc.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE THIRSTY DOG.

[A fol. 73*a*. 1; B fol. 59*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, WHOSE NAME IS SWEET, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with her servant our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now [one day] there were two women with our Lady MARY, and a thirsty dog came to them, and they drove him away; but our Lady MARY was exceeding grieved when she saw how thirsty he was, and she wept. And the women said unto her, "Wilt thou be more merciful unto "this dog than we? Shall not Christ, [A fol. 73*a*. 2] Who is called the "Messiah, be born of thee?" Now when our holy Lady heard these words great joy entered into her heart. Then, taking up her water pitcher, she went [B fol. 59*a*. 2] to a place some distance away, and having put off her shoes from her feet, she poured water into one of them and gave it to the thirsty dog to drink. And one of the women said unto her, "Why hast thou drawn water [for him] from thy pitcher? And if thy jar "be broken thou wilt not find water [elsewhere]". Then our Lady MARY answered and said unto her, "The water [which I have given the dog] "is not that which cometh forth from a well, but from heaven, and God, "Who hath given this thirsty dog water to drink, [A fol. 73*b*. 1] gave it "unto me from above". Now after she had spoken these words the Word of the Father took up His abode in her. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE KHALÎFA OF ATHRIBIS.

There was[1] a certain king whose title was "Kalîfâ"[2], and he reigned after his father Rashîd (now the interpretation of this title is "cruel" (or "savage"), and before he had received the kingdom he set himself in opposition to the Christians, and persecuted them[3], and made violent attacks upon the churches. And his disposition was like unto that of [A fol. 81*a*. 2; B fol. 60*b*. 2] Paul before his conversion[4] to the faith of Jesus Christ, when he was a Jew. Now this king chose a certain man from among his soldiers, and having appointed him general over one hundred horseman, he commanded him to journey through all the cities and provinces of the country of Egypt, and to go round about in all the borders thereof, and to pull down and destroy the churches, and everything which was therein [A fol. 81*b*. 1]. And this man came unto the city of Athribis[1], that is to say to that portion of the boundary of its territory which is opposite to the building wherein they make honey[2]. Now there was in the city an exceedingly large church[3] which had been built in the name of our holy Lady [B fol. 61*a*. 1] the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and it was the first and oldest of the churches which had been built in the name of our holy Lady MARY in all the monasteries of Egypt. And in this church there were four doors, and in these four doors were four [A fol. 81*b*. 2] shrines, and above the four shrines were four canopies, [and between each of these] was a distance of forty cubits; and one hundred and six[ty] pillars, which had been hewn out of white stone, supported them. Each of the pillars was carved all over with vine branches, and the hollow parts of them were sculptured and ornamented with cunning work in stone, and they were encircled with bands of gold and silver. And there were in the church four and twenty saints' chapels, and in them were placed [B fol. 61*a*. 2] four and twenty tabernacles of the Law. And among these was an image of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth

[1] B begins:— "O my brethren, ye Christian people, we will relate unto you this great miracle "and wonderful deed which our holy Lady.... wrought in the city of Athribis".

[3] These, and other words, are added from the variants given by the MS. B.

[1] I. e., the capital of the tenth nome of Lower Egypt, the name of which is written  Ḥet-ta-ḥer-dbt, the Αδριβις of the Greeks, and the ⲁⲑⲣⲓⲃⲓ of the Copts; the city lay on the east bank of the Damietta branch of the Nile.

[2] The allusion here is to Benha al-'Asal, i. e., "Benha of the honey", a large village or town to the north-east of which Athribis was situated. Benha has been famous for its honey for centuries, and it is said that the words "al-'Asal" were added to its name because the Copt Maḳawḳas sent a jar of its honey to Muḥammad the Prophet as a gift.

[3] M. Amélineau, quoting from an Arabic MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, thus describes the Church of the Virgin at Athribis. "Dans cette ville était une église au nom de la Vierge avec "quatre portes et quatre piliers. Entre chaque pilier, il y avait 40 coudées d'intervalle, ce qui donnait "une longueur de plus de 80 mètres à l'église entière. Elle était tout entière bâtie de pierres et ne com- "prenait pas moins de 160 colonnes. Le sanctuaire et l'autel étaient sculptés, ornés d'or et d'argent. "Il y avait en outre une image de la Vierge incrustée de pierreries, revêtue d'une robe de soie, provenant "de Constantin, avec des portraits de Michel, de Gabriel et des autres anges. Des chandeliers d'or et "d'argent y étaient continuellement allumés". La Géographie de l'Égypte, pp. 67, 68.

to God, [A fol. 82*a*. 1] which was sculptured and inlaid with mother-of-pearl, and this image was apparelled in a garment which was made of the purple of Constantinople. And near the image of the Virgin MARY were sculptured the figures of two angels[1] which stood one on each side of it. And the lamps which were hanging before the image were made of gold and of silver, and they ceased not to burn by day or by night, for [the servants of the church] kept them supplied and filled with the holy oil. And there lived in that church a certain monk who was the chief priest, and his name was John. He was a virgin, and a righteous man, and he kept diligently the laws of the church in respect of the times for prayer, and for the consecration of the Eucharist, [A fol. 82*a*. 2] both by night and by day, without ceasing. And God was well pleased with him by reason of the beauty of his righteousness, and his gentleness, and his humility. But let us return to the beginning of the story.

Now when the general [B fol. 61*b*. 1] of the king's host had arrived at the church, he took up his abode on the bank of the Nile[2], and they pitched his tents there so that he might rest a few days. And the people of the city were greatly moved because they heard that the general had come to pull down the church, and to destroy the fair beauty of the building which had been built in the name of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, [A fol. 82*b*. 1] and that he was about to make an end of the words of the priests thereof who used to proclaim the true faith therein. And the people informed the holy man John concerning this thing, and when he had heard it he became sad, and was exceedingly sorrowful. Then he girded himself about with strength in the Holy Spirit which dwelt in him, and he rose up and prayed unto God [B fol. 61*b*. 2] in bitterness of heart. And after he had made an end of his prayer and of the supplication which he offered up with much crying, he left his house and departed unto the place where the general was [sitting] in his tent. Now when the servants of the general saw him they said unto the holy man John [A fol. 82*b*. 2], "Why hast thou come here, O monk, and what dost thou desire?" And John answered and said unto them, "Behold, I have the wish that ye should "announce me quickly to the general, for there is a word which I would "speak with him, and it must be spoken between us two in private"; so the servants departed and made known to the governor concerning him, and he made [them] bring John into his presence. Then John gave him the salutation of "peace" with modesty and humility of spirit. And the general received him, and said unto him, "And to thee also be peace "with the mercy of God!" And again the general said unto him, "O monk, "[A fol. 83*a*. 1; B fol. 62*a*. 1] hast thou a desire to seek ought from me?" Then John the monk said unto him, "Yea, my lord. I wish thee to take "me unto some place, where there is no man except thyself, so that I may "speak unto thee in private the word which I have to say". And the general commanded those who were round about him to withdraw, and there remained no one [with them] except the friend who was first counsellor, and who lay in his bosom. Then the general said unto him, "O "monk, declare what thine heart desireth." And John said unto him, "O "my lord and master, behold now! I have heard that thou hast come "hither to pull down the church, and to destroy the fair beauty [A fol. "83*a*. 2] of the edifice thereof, which hath been built in the name of our "holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, the church which "is the first and oldest [B fol. 62*a*. 2] of all the churches [in Egypt]. "And behold, I entreat [the favour of] God, and I make supplication "unto thee also that thou wilt rise up [and come] and walk about a "little in the courtyard and in the broad aisles of the church, so that "thou mayest be able to see the building thereof, and its foundations, "and the paving of its courtyard, and the boundary of its walls, and the "roof of the building which is over the shrines, and its pillars and its "vaulted roofs which are inlaid with gold, and silver, and shining mother-"of-pearl. Come now, that thou mayest look upon the church before the "order for the destruction thereof goeth forth from [A fol. 83*b*. 1] thy "mouth". Then he who was the first counsellor and friend of [B fol. 62*b*. 1] the general said unto him, "O master, the words of this old man are "weighty, and to them attacheth a meaning; it will do thee no harm to "look upon the church, on the contrary, it will do thee good. Rise up, "then, that thou mayest see the church — for the way [thither] is short — "even though the beauty of the building may not please thee".

And it came to pass that when the general had heard what his first counsellor, who lay in his bosom, said unto him, he rose up quickly and walked round about through the courts and aisles of the church in doubt of mind, whilst the old man John waited in the path before him. [Now when the general and his counsellor] had come into the church, and had looked about it [A fol. 83*b*. 2], they marvelled at the beauty of its disposition and arrangement, and at the majesty of each and all of its splendid decorations, and at its venerable appearance, and at its doors. Then the general said unto [B fol. 62*b*. 2] John, "O monk, how exceedingly "beautiful is this church! The foundations thereof are pleasing, and the "building thereof is glorious and of most marvellous beauty. But what "shall we say concerning it? For the king Kalîfâ hath commanded us to "pull down the churches and to overthrow the houses of idols, and for "this reason we dare not transgress by the least jot or tittle the words of "his command". And the old man John answered and said unto the general [A fol. 84*a*. 1] in a humble voice, "O master, thy word is true; "but I pray thee to hearken unto the words which I would speak before "thee, for the words which I would speak unto thee are good and not "bad". Then the general said unto him, "What good words are there

"[which thou couldst speak] that would please me? But speak, I pray "thee". And the old man John said unto him, "O my lord, grant me a "boon and wait in patience for a space of three days [B fol. 63*a*. 1] before "thou destroyest this church — and for each day I will give thee one "hundred dînârs — until a letter with commands from the king shall reach "thee; and after the three days are ended then shall it be as God Almighty "wisheth. And if a letter with commands reach thee [good and well]; "and if not, then do according as thou shalt desire". Now when the general and his friend and counsellor had heard these words from John the priest, he laughed at him, and derided him, and said unto him, "O "aged man, between us and between the country of Macedonia is it not "a journey which would require a space of two months to perform by "those who would travel thither? And to return hither would also require "two months, that is to say, added together the number of the months is "four, and yet thou sayest unto me, 'Wait patiently for three days until a "'letter with commands from the king shall reach thee'!" And the counsellor said unto the general, [A fol. 84*b*. 1; B fol. 63*a*. 2] "As [these] "Christians grow old their brains dry up in the years of their old age, "and their understanding waxeth little, and they become stupid through "overmuch fasting and prayer, and they destroy their minds with food "made of garden herbs, and lentiles, and pulse. But now, I will give thee "counsel which shall be pleasing unto thee. Take from this old man the "three hundred dînârs, for they will pay that which thou owest; a letter "with commands from the king cannot reach thee in three days, and after "that period thou canst do as thou wishest".

Then straightway the general said unto the blessed [A fol. 84*b*. 1] old man, "I consent, and I will wait patiently for thee until three days are "ended, and in accordance with what thou sayest I will not pull down "the church". And John the priest said unto him, "Now therefore, establish "a covenant with me, and swear an oath before our holy Lady, [B fol. 83*b*. 1]

"the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, that thou wilt not change "these thy words, and that thou wilt not deceive me". Then they made a covenant together and they established an agreement, and the general took an oath before God at the shrine of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY. And straightway the governor went forth [from the church] with his counsellor, and he tarried in the [A fol. 85*a*. 1] place where he was living for three days; and the general and the counsellor together derided the blessed old man, and they laughed his folly to scorn. Then John the priest said unto his companions, "Shut ye fast the doors of the church "upon me, and bolt them with the bolts thereof, so that none of you may "be able to draw nigh unto me and to visit me for three days and three "nights". And having said these words he went into the sanctuary of the church, and stood up before the image of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God; and his mind was carried away into heaven, and he began to pray with exceedingly great watchfulness, and he made abundant supplication with [A fol. 85*a*. 2] discretion and with understanding. He wept with a bitter weeping, and scalding tears flowed from his eyes and covered his cheeks, and he bathed himself in the flood of tears which rolled down from his weeping upon the place where his holy feet stood; and he grieved and mourned with sore lamentation lest he should see the destruction of the church. Then, standing up before the figure of our Lady, he said, "O my holy Lady, thou two-fold "Virgin MARY, who didst give birth to God, thou deliverer of those who "commit themselves unto thee, who dost receive into thy safe keeping "those who flee unto thee for refuge, O my Lady, thou Queen of heaven "and of earth [A fol. 85*b*. 1], behold [B fol. 64*a*. 1] the time hath arrived "for thee to pray and to make supplication unto thy beloved Son, our "Lord and Redeemer, Jesus Christ. O my Lady, He Who was brought "forth by thee is holy, and He is called the Son of God the Most High, "and the Lord God hath given unto Him the throne of David His father.

"He shall rule the house of Jacob for ever, and His kingdom shall have "no end, and He shall perform for thee everything which thou shalt ask "from Him. Now hath the time drawn nigh for the manifestation of thy "power over thine enemies who wish to overthrow thy holy place. Arise, "do battle with thine enemies and let them not escape; destroy thou their "counsel [A fol. 85*b*. 2], and let them not say, 'Ha, ha, we have seen with "'our eyes [B fol. 64*a*. 2] the disgrace, and the destruction, and the misery "'of the place' wherein thou dwellest. O my Lady, I entreat thee and "I adjure thee by the Holy Word Whom thou didst bear [in thy womb] "for nine months and five days — that is, until the time when He was "brought forth by thee — and Whom thou didst suckle at thy breast; "and I entreat and adjure thee by God, His Father, [B fol. 64*b*. 1] not to "punish always, and not to be angry for ever, O thou who art tender of "heart and whose mercies towards the children of men are abundant; "and I entreat and adjure thee by thy prayer which is received before the "eyes of thy Son, to make manifest this day the might of thy miraculous "power, O my Lady, thou Lady of angels and of men!"

With these words, and with others like unto them, did John make supplication [unto our Lady MARY], and he wept by day and by night, and he ceased not [A fol. 86*a*. 1] to keep watch, and to pray, and to prostrate himself before her, with words and deeds of service; and he neither ate, nor drank, nor tasted food with his lips until the end of the three days. And it came to pass on the third day, at the eleventh hour of the night, after cockcrow [B fol. 64*b*. 2] but before the daybreak had come, that behold, our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and who is tender of heart unto those who make supplication unto her with abundance of tears and with a broken spirit, appeared unto him in visible form from out of her image, and she poured forth upon John grace from her lips. And she said unto him, "O priest John, behold, God hath re- "ceived all thy petition [A fol. 86*a*. 2] which thou hast made unto Him

"concerning the destruction of the house of my sanctuary, and from this "time forward thou shalt not be sorrowful, neither shall thy soul weary "itself with toil. For this night I have commanded the king Kalîfâ to "write a letter and to send it unto this general, [ordering him] not to over-"throw the house of my sanctuary. And behold, this letter which containeth "the royal commands shall arrive quickly from the country of Macedonia, "yea, it shall come in this same hour, as it were in the twinkling of "an eye, and it shall be written with his own hand and bear his own "words, ordering the general neither to plunder nor to overthrow this "church. And now, fear not, and let not thine heart be dismayed, but "be strong in the strength of God and cease thou to afflict thyself griev-"ously, [A fol. 86*b*. 1; B fol. 65*a*. 1] and weary not thy soul with toil, for "no man hath power [to harm] the house of my sanctuary. For the Father "of my beloved Son is the pillar thereof, and my Only Son is the ground "upon which it standeth, and the Holy Spirit is the foundation and base "thereof". And having said these words and given him the salutation of peace she disappeared from him. Now when the priest John had heard her gracious words and the utterances of the mouth of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, at that moment I say the gracious gift of joy and gladness came upon him, and he exulted and found rest through the Holy Spirit. And he put on strength and bowed down before the image [B Fol. 65*a*. 2] of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and he sang praises unto her name with sweet songs. [A Fol. 86*b*. 2] See now, O my beloved brethren, how exceedingly mighty was the prayer of this good, and pure, and righteous man! It was even as the Apostle said, "The prayer of the righteous "man hath power[1], and it giveth help, and maketh a man to have do-minion".

Meanwhile, the general was in his tent and was lying fast asleep upon his bed; now his tent was firmly closed and a lamp was burning before him. And at that moment[1] he awoke from his sleep, and saw there by the light of the lamp a white dove which had dropped a sealed letter from her beak. [A fol. 65*b*. 1] Then marvelling greatly at this thing he enquired of his servant, and said unto him, "Whence did she come? "And how hath this white dove entered into the tent, seeing that the "tent is firmly closed, and the wings thereof are fastened with pegs?" [A fol. 87*a*. 1] And his servant said unto him, "I know neither whence "she hath come, nor by what means she hath entered into [the tent], but "only that I saw her dropping a sealed letter from her beak, and that the "letter was sealed with the seal of the king". Then straightway the white dove vanished before their eyes. And the general said, "Behold, my "soul is moved, and my heart is confused by reason of this thing". Then he rose up quickly and took the letter in his hand, and he opened and read it by the light of the lamp; and he found that the letter was in the handwriting of the king himself, and that the ink wherewith the king's own words had been written was wet as if they had just been written. And the letter spake thus: — "Letter from the king Kalîfâ unto a certain "general in command of one [A Fol. 87*a*. 2] hundred soldiers mounted "on horses, whom I commanded to go and travel about through the bor- "ders of Egypt, and to overthrow the churches of the Christians. Know "now and understand, O general, concerning the people whom God "[B Fol. 66*b*. 2] the Most High loveth, for thou shalt do harm neither "unto them nor unto the church which is in the city of Athribis, nor unto "the [other] churches which are within the borders of Egypt. But when "thou hast read this letter which containeth mine own words and is "written by mine own hand, thou shalt rise up straightway, and quickly

[1] I. e., the monent when the Virgin MARY was speaking to John.

"and in all haste thou shalt come unto me. And furthermore, as con"cerning the church in the city of Athribis which hath been built in the "name of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, "[A Fol. 87*b*. 1.] I desire that it shall neither be desecrated, nor harmed, "nor destroyed in any way whatsoever. And behold, I have written this "letter at the eleventh hour of the night, [B Fol. 66*a*. 1] and in testimony
"thereof I set my seal"; and thereafter followed the seal which the king had set to the letter, and was understood between him and the general.

And it came to pass when the general had seen the letter and had read [it] he marvelled exceedingly, and he found the matter very hard to understand; and trembling and dismay laid hold upon him. Then he said unto his chief counsellor, "Take with thee four young men and go
"and bring quickly [unto me] the old man the monk, who was in the "church;" and the young men went quickly and sought him with much toil, and they found him standing [in the church] praying; [A fol. 87*b*. 2] and they took him and brought him to the general [B fol. 66*a*. 2]. And it came to pass when the general saw him afar off, [he went out] to meet him with a bright, and glad, and joyful countenance, and he said unto him, "O servant of God, sit thee down, and tell me where thou hast been "from the day when we parted until this day." Then John the priest said unto him, "I remained in the church praying unto God Almighty that "He would look upon my lowly estate, and that He would not let me "see the destruction of the church. And at a certain time our Lady, who "is in the image, appeared unto me, and she told me how a letter had "come unto thee which contained the royal commands, bidding thee to "desist from the attempt to destroy the church. Then straightway I as"cribed praise unto God Almighty [A fol. 88*a*. 1] the Most High, Who "is to be praised, and I gave thanks unto the holy Lady, the Virgin "MARY, for the deliverance of the church from destruction." And the governor said unto him [B fol. 66*b*. 1], "Yea, what thou hast said is true,

"and thy words are right. Behold, a letter containing the royal commands "of my lord the king hath just reached me from the beak of a white "dove, and I could not understand by what means there reached me the "dove that dropped from her beak into my tent the letter which contained "the royal commands of my lord the king, and was written by his own "hand. And the king hath commanded me to desist from the attempt to "destroy the church, and to go [back] to him. And now, O priest, I know "the intercession and the power of the help of our Lady MARY, and that "her Son [A fol. 88*a*. 2] doeth for her everything which she asketh Him "[to do]. Therefore, rise up, and let us go to the church, and let us pray "before the picture (or image) of our holy Lady, the twofold Virgin "MARY, that she will help me and make prosperous my way." Then straightway they rose up and went together to the church, and John the priest prayed the prayer which was fitting, and the general himself prayed unto our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY; and he gave unto the church one hundred dînârs, and the three hundred dînârs of gold, concerning which he made three days before a covenant that John the priest should give him, he remitted unto him. Then the general bade farewell unto John the priest and departed from him [B fol. 66*b*. 2] in peace; and he set out on his journey to Macedonia, giving thanks unto God Almighty and marvelling at the wonderful and and miraculous thing which he had seen.

And it came to pass that at the end of two months the general arrived in the country of Macedonia, and when he entered into the presence of the king he saluted him, and he and his soldiers bowed down before him; and the king was exceedingly glad to see him, and he gave him the salutation of peace. Then the king made those who were standing round about him to withdraw, and he said unto the general, "Did the letter containing my royal commands which I sent unto thee in "the beak of a white dove reach thee?" And the general said unto him, "Yea, it reached me in the night, just before daybreak, and I have come,

"even as thou didst command me to come, and here is the letter with me "now" [A fol. 88*b*. 2]; and he shewed the letter unto the king. Then the king marvelled and said unto him, "Is this thing indeed true?" And the general said unto him, "O my lord, I swear unto thee by the living God "that this great mystery, which hath never been imagined in the heart "[B fol. 67*a*. 1] of man, hath been made manifest unto me. Tell me by "what means thou didst send it unto me, for I have never heard of a "thing like unto this." Then the king said unto him, "Behold, I will tell "thee. Three days before I wrote this letter unto thee a great and mar-"vellous thing happened. At the first hour of the night, whilst I was "asleep, I saw a fire burning brightly in my palace, in the hall of my "kingdom, and the light thereof illumined the whole earth. And I said, "unto [A Fol. 89*a*. 1] my soul, 'What is this which hath happened unto "'me this day?' And [when] I had come into my palace, a man who "shone with light said unto me, 'Behold, knowest thou not that our holy "'Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, hath come "'and hath entered into thy palace? Rise up and do homage unto her.' "And again, I heard a mighty noise which was [B fol. 67*a*. 2] greater "than the roars and crashings of thunders and lightnings, and there were "other [beings] who uttered loud cries of joy and exultation and the sweet "sounds of the singing of praises which were like unto the sound of an "organ. Then there went forth from her a voice which said unto me, "'Who commanded thee to make thyself a foe unto the house of my "'sanctuary which is in the city of Athribis? And why hast thou given "'orders to destroy it?' And I spake unto her with words of fear, saying, "'Forgive me this thing, O my Lady,' for I have given no command to "'do this thing, and I have no knowledge of the matter whatsoever'. "And she said unto me, 'If thou dost not write a letter ordering that the "'house of my sanctuary shall not be overthrown thou shalt die an evil "'death'. And again on the night of the following day that voice appeared

"unto me in the same manner, and spake unto me from the place where "our Lady MARY was, [B fol. 67*b*. 1] saying, 'Didst thou not say unto me "'yesterday that thou wast not a foe unto the house of my sanctuary "'which is in the city of Athribis?' And I said unto her in great trepidation, "'Behold, I have heard thy command, and I have received the voice of "'thy words, and I will write unto [my] general, even as thou hast com-"'manded me [to do], O my Lady'. And it came to pass when the "morning had come that I again neglected to do the command of my "Lady, [A fol. 89*b*. 1] and in the folly of my heart I forgot the vision. "Now on the night of the third day I saw for the third time the form and "appearance of that voice, though I know not how. But it lifted me up from "my bed and set me upright upon my feet; then a mighty dread, which "tore me asunder and made all my members to tremble, fell upon me. "And that voice spake once again, and said unto me, 'I will not have "'compassion upon thee in my mercy, [B fol. 67*b*. 2] but I will destroy "'thee quickly, both soul and body, and I will wipe out the memorial of "'thee from off the earth, because thou hast transgressed the word of my "'command. Behold, I have appeared unto thee three times [in] three "'nights, and I have told thee not to make thyself a foe unto the house "'[A fol. 89*b*. 1] of my sanctuary which is in the city of Athribis, and not "'to overthrow the building thereof. But now, write a letter of com-"'mand, and send it quickly unto the general whom thou hast despatched "'to overthrow the churches; do then according to what I say unto "'thee'. Then I bowed low before her, and said unto her, 'O my Lady, "'if I write a letter of command, who shall take and bring it unto the "'general? for the country wherein he is is afar off.' And she said unto "me, 'Do thou write according as I have commanded thee, and God "'Almighty shall decree who shall take it to him'. Then straightway I "wrote the letter with great and anxious care, for she was holding my "hand. And there came unto me a white dove, and when he had drawn

"nigh [B fol. 68*a*. 1] he took the letter, which was sealed, from my hand "[A fol. 90*a*. 1] with his beak at the eleventh hour of the night, and he "departed from me, and winged his flight upwards in the air; and I "watched him until he disappeared from my sight. And thou didst say "unto me, 'A white dove came unto me at the twelfth hour of the night, "'and dropped the letter from his beak into my tent'. This hard and "astonishing matter, the like of which I have neither heard of nor seen "before, our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, hath "wrought. Behold, from now and henceforth we shall understand and "know well the helpfulness and greatness of her marvellous acts. From "this day onwards we will abide in the hope of our [A fol. 90*a*. 2] holy "Lady, the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and by the good "pleasure of God, the Most High, let us persevere in the love of her, and "let us study diligently to strive and attain unto the salvation of our souls, "and let us build a house in her name."

Then the king commanded them to build a church of beautiful appearance and graceful form, and they built a church [B fol. 68*a*. 2] nigh unto his palace; and they made the building thereof exceedingly beautiful. And the king made supplication, and worshipped, and celebrated the Eucharist therein each year on the festivals of the commemoration of the Virgin MARY, and he caused to be painted a picture of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, whose name is sweet, the life of all the world, at the mention of whose [A fol. 90*b*. 1] name worship is fitting; and he continued [to worship] therein with rejoicing all the days of his life. Now that picture wrought many miracles and wonderful things for him until he departed from this world and entered into the kingdom of the heavens. And all the people and the officers who were under his authority gathered themselves together in that church on the day of the festival of our Lady, and they paid honour unto her and loved her exceedingly; and it existeth even unto this day. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David and with all the children of baptism (i. e., Christians); and may we all love her together, and [A fol. 90*b*. 2] may He have mercy upon us for ever and ever! Amen.[1]

A miracle of thy love, O flower of Ḥannâ, was made known before the Kalîfâ.
A bird bearing a parchment letter with royal commands flew away,
And at thy behest brought it unto a land which was afar off.
Let the Fish of the sea which beareth gold
Swim through the abysses and go up on the shore.

CHAPTER XXXV.

HOW THE VIRGIN MARY APPEARED UNTO THE ARCHBISHOP THEOPHILUS.[2]

A Miracle of our holy Lady, the Virgin Mary. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

[1] In B the story ends thus:—

"And the church which was built [standeth] unto this day, and the building thereof is uninjured. "Behold, O ye who love Christ, ye have heard this mighty miracle which was wrought by our holy "Lady, the two-fold Virgin Mary, who gave birth to God. Let us now make supplication unto Him "Who was born of her, and Who became the salvation of Adam and his seed, that He may pardon us "our sins and wipe out our transgressions, and help us in the time of our tribulation, and make to prosper "the fruit of our land, and nourish the children who are born, [B Fol. 68*b*. 1], and give strength unto "the aged. May He lengthen the days of His servant Ḫâyla Mâryâm, and may He strengthen in the "true faith, through the intercession of this pure Virgin, us her servants and her hand-maidens, and me "also her sinful servant, Ḫâyla Mâryâm, for ever and ever! Amen."

[2] I. e., the twenty-third Patriarch of Alexandria, who sat from about A. D. 385 to A. D. 412; see Renaudot, Hist. Pat., pp. 103—108. This Patriarch is often called Philotheus; we owe several apocryphal legends to his pen.

[HERE BEGINNETH THE STORY OF] HOW OUR LADY APPEARED UNTO THE ARCHBISHOP THEOPHILUS, AND HOW SHE SPAKE WITH HIM AND STRENGTHENED HIM AFTER THE WEARINESS OF THE WAY. He said:—

O my fathers and brethren, hearken unto what I shall say unto you with fear, and with true faith, how our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, [A fol. 91*a*. 1] appeared unto me. On the Sunday which hath just passed by we had brought to an end our prayers for the night, and the fathers who were bishops had gone to sleep by themselves. And I went up upon the raised platform wherein abideth our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and I stood up and stretched out my hands, and I made supplication unto God, and said, "Hearken unto me, O my Lord and "Saviour Jesus Christ, Who didst hearken unto those who were gathered "together at [the Council of] Nicæa until at length they established the "creed (literally the Law) of God. Hearken unto me, O Thou who didst "hearken unto Abbâ Athanasius the apostle, and Who didst help him "out of all his tribulation. I am prepared [A fol. 91*a*. 2] to do service for "Thee, and I know always that Thou wilt hearken unto me, and that "Thou art for ever nigh unto those who love Thy Name, O my Lord "and God. Have compassion upon me and turn Thou me not backwards, "for I have yoked myself unto Thee from my youth up, even unto this "hour. I beseech Thee to shew me how Thou didst come into this world, "and how Thou didst dwell in this house in the wilderness. And help "Thou me to build this house in such wise that it may become a great "church wherein [men] shall praise Thy holy Name, which shall be ex-"alted and glorified. Unto Thee belong power and forgiveness, and "Thou art the Good One, together with Thy Father and the Holy Spirit, "now, henceforth, and for ever and ever. Amen."

And it came to pass when I had prayed [A fol. 91*b*. 1] in this wise a mighty light appeared unto me, and I thought that the sun had risen; and I saw a marvellously great light whereon sat the Queen of women, our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. Her face shone like the sun by reason of the light which was upon her, and she was clothed with light of such splendour that at length I said, "There "is no being in [this] world who is able to look upon such great glory"; and Michael, and Gabriel, and thousands of angels were going round about her. And it came to pass when I saw them that I fell upon the ground, and I became like a dead man, but Michael raised me up and removed from me fear and dread. Then [our holy Lady] herself spake unto me, [A fol. 91*b*. 2] and said, "I am the holy two-fold Virgin MARY, "who gave birth to God; rise up and be not afraid. Salutation unto thee, "O thou horseman and warrior who doest battle for the faith! Salutation "unto thee, O thou strong corner [stone] in the churches of God! Rise up, "be strong, and know that I am the Mother of the King of the heavens "and of the earth. He Whom the heavens and the earth cannot contain "did I bear in my womb for nine months, and by His will I suckled with "the milk of my breasts Him that giveth food unto all flesh. I, MARY, "the daughter of Joachim and Ḥannâ, of the tribe of Judah, and of the "seed of David, have appeared unto thee by the desire [A fol. 92*a*. 1] "of my beloved Son; and I will shew thee that which thou hast asked "and sought from me concerning this house and concerning my coming "into the country of Egypt from Jerusalem. Now as concerning this house "He desireth to leave [it] in this state[1], so that it may be a testimony unto "all the generations that shall come into the world concerning the lowly "estate which came upon us; for my beloved Son did not desire to be

[1] The church of Ḳuesḳuâm is here referred to; compare:— "Pilgrimages have been made by "many multitudes from all districts to this church from ancient times, because it has been celebrated on "account of signs and wonders and the healing of various diseases; and the time of pilgrimage is at Easter, "every year. The Lord Christ commanded that the original size of this church should not be added to; "but that it should remain as it was. The mark of the hand of the Lord is on the eastern and on the "western mountain." See EVETTS, Churches and Monasteries of Egypt, p. 227.

"exalted on the earth. He rode upon the clouds, and not upon horses "whereon men ride, which is a sign of the earth; but He was carried in "my arms from Jerusalem unto this house. And we dwelt in a lowly "condition in those days, but I remembered [A fol. 92*a*. 2] the word of "Elizabeth, who said, 'Who am I that the mother of my Lord Jesus "'Christ should come unto me?'[1] Thou hast honoured me more than my "station [requireth]."

And she answered and said unto me, "Theophilus, uncover the "ear of thine heart and understand that which I shall say unto thee in this "hour, and write it down upon paper, and cause it to come into [all] "cities and regions for the commemoration of me until the end of the "world. Now as concerning the manner in which I brought forth Jesus "Christ. A star from out of the East appeared [unto me], and in its "great light was hidden the light of [all the other] stars. Now I was "abiding in my house and I was afraid of everything, and there was none "to minister unto me. I was a virgin, and I knew nothing whatsoever, "[A fol. 92*b*. 1] and was the firstborn of my mother. I had never at any "time dwelt with women who had given birth to children except Elizabeth, "the barren woman, who when she was nigh to bring forth had every-"thing which was necessary made ready for her by her neighbours. As "for me, I had no clothing, and I sought therefor, but found nothing ex-"cept swathings of sackcloth, and in these swathings I wrapped His holy "Body. Nigh at hand was a stable wherein they fed the oxen, and herein "was [laid] my pillow, and I laid the Child to sleep therein. And there "were there an ass and an ox which bowed down in homage unto Him, "and they kept him warm with their breath, for at that season the days "were cold. (Now it was the twenty-ninth day of the month Tâḫshâsh.[2])

"And straightway I looked, [A fol. 92*b*. 2] and behold, the angels, and "the archangels, and the Seraphim, and the Cherubim came in their com- "panies, and they bowed down in adoration before Him, and they ascribed "praise unto Him, each according to His tongue, and said, 'This is the "'day which God hath made and blessed'. Then they came unto me, "and they paid honour unto me, for honour had been given unto me by "the Father. And they said, 'Blessed art thou above women, and blessed "'is the fruit of thy womb which hath gone forth to do good unto its "'nation which sin hath destroyed. Thou art the spotless Bride, and in "'thee there is no guile. Thou art the blessed Dove, the Mother of God, "'the Queen, the Mother of the living King, Who hath appeared from "'thee, and Who shall become the life of the world. [A fol. 93*a*. 1] "'Blessed are we, moreover, for we have seen our Lord born in the "'flesh.'

"Then Saint Gabriel drew nigh unto me with his shining and joyful "countenance, and he bowed down before me, and said unto me, 'This "'is He of Whom I told thee, and concerning Whom I brought thee glad "'tidings in the times that are past, saying, that He would appear through "'thee, and that He would give mercy and strength unto all the peoples "'who shall believe in His Name and render service unto His glory.' "Then Joseph came and with him were Salômê and the midwife[1], and "when they had seen what had happened they rejoiced with a great "joy. And when the midwife saw the Child in the stable she bowed "down unto Him, and she lifted Him up in her arms, and said, 'Blessed "'am I whose eyes have seenThy joy this day, O Thou Who hast come "'into the world to forgive the sins [A fol. 93*a*. 2] of sinners of whom "'am I.' And she turned to me and said unto me, 'Blessed art thou, O "'mother of God, concerning Whom the Prophets have cried, saying,

"'Our God shall appear from a virgin. As for me, I am thine hand-
"'maiden, and I will never separate myself from thee, and I will minister "'unto thee until I die.' Then came the shepherds unto whom He had "appeared in the light, and they bowed down in adoration before Him "in the stable, and they cried out and said, 'Thou art the Saviour of the "'world, even as they have told us, and Thou art indeed the Son of God.
"'Blessed are we who have seen the glory of thy Divinity, and because we "'were ready [to come hither] as we heard.' And they drew nigh unto "me, and bowed low before me, and they said unto me, 'Blessed art thou "'above all the women that are upon the earth [A fol. 94*b*. 1]! And "'blessed is thy womb which bare Him, and blessed are thy breasts which "'suckled Him, for thou hast given birth for us Him that is the Life of "'the world.' And the whole number of the angels that were there "declared what they had seen and heard, saying, 'Glory to God in the "'heavens, [let there be] peace on the earth unto the children of men of "'His good pleasure'; and everyone who heard [these words] marvelled, "and I said, 'What shall I become?'

"And after these things, on the eighth day, He came that they might "circumcise Him according to the Law of the Jews; and they called His "Name 'Jesus', according to what the angel had said unto me before "I had conceived Him. And in those days there came certain men who "were Magians from the country of the East, and they were making en"quiries in the cities and districts round about, saying, 'Where is Christ "'born? [A fol. 93*b*. 1] for we have seen His star in the East, and we "'have come to worship Him.' When Herod heard this he was greatly "moved, together with [the people] of all the borders of Jerusalem. Then "Herod gathered together all the nobles, and the priests, and the scribes, "and the elders of the people, and he asked them, saying, 'Where is Christ "born? And when was His appointed time?' And they said unto him, "He hath been born in these [last] days, in Bethlehem of Judea, even as "the prophet Milkĕyâs (Micah)[1] saith, 'And thou, Bethlehem of the country "'of Ephratah, art not the least of the provinces of Judah, for from thee "'shall go forth the King who shall rule my people Israel'. Then Herod "said unto the Magians, 'Go ye and seek out the Child, and when ye "have found Him come and tell me, [A fol. 94*a*. 1] that I may worship "Him!' [Now he said this] not because [he wanted] to worship Him but in "order that he might kill Him, for he thought that [the Child was] an "earthly being, and that His kingdom was of earth. And when the Ma"gians had heard those things from the king, they went forth to seek for "the Child. Now that same star which guided them from their own "country, until it brought them unto the place where my beloved Son "was, left them, and was no more seen. And when they had entered into "[the stable] they saw the Child in my arms, and they worshipped Him,

"and with joy and gladness they brought forth gifts of gold, frankincense, "and myrrh; and they cried out, saying, 'Blessed be the Great King Who "'shall destroy the kingdoms of the earth. And moreover, Thou shalt "'descend into the earth, and Thou shalt bind in chains Satan, even "'according to what we have found in [A fol. 94*a*. 2] the Book of the "'Prophets and wise Fathers'. And that night they slept [there], thinking "that on the morrow they would go to Herod and tell him that they had "found the Child and His mother. But the angel of the Lord appeared "and said unto them, 'Get ye to your own country in peace'; and they "went there according as the angel of God had said unto them.

"Now when forty days were ended we brought Him up to the "Temple that they might do unto Him [according to] the Law of Moses, "and according as they are wont to do unto the children of Israel. And "when we had brought Him into the house of the sanctuary [we found]
"there a priest whose name was Simeon, and he was expecting to see

"the Saviour before he died; and I gave him the Child and he took Him "and carried Him in his arms, and he blessed Him and bore Him round "in the tabernacle [A fol. 94*b*. 1]. Now when my beloved Son saw Simeon "He opened his eyes, for he was a blind man. And Simeon opened his "mouth and said, 'Now straightway let Thy servant depart in peace, O "'Lord, according as Thou hast commanded; for mine eyes have seen "'Thy salvation which Thou hast prepared before all Thy people. [To "'be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be] the glory of Thy people "'Israel.'[1] And when he had ended those words he gave me the Child, "and we came [back] in peace with joy and gladness; and the old man "Simeon the priest died on that same day.

"And Herod continued to wait two years for the Magians to return "unto him, but they came not back, for they had gone to the country of "their abode; and Herod was greatly moved, and he and all his servants "were afraid. Then Satan appeared unto him [A fol. 94*b*. 2] by night "in the form of a wise man, and said unto him, 'Wherefore remainest thou [thus idle]? For thou and all thy kingdom shall be destroyed.' And "Herod answered and said, 'What shall I do?' Then Satan said unto "him, 'On the morrow, in the morning, send thy servants and command them "'not to leave [alive] in Bethlehem any which is two years old and under, "'and let them slay them; and as the Child [Jesus] shall be found among "'those who shall be slain He shall not grow up and shall not take thy "'kingdom [from thee].' Now on that day the angel of God appeared "unto Joseph, and said unto him, 'Rise up, and take the Child and His "'mother, and depart unto the country of Egypt until I give thee His "'word; for Herod seeketh the Child to slay Him.' [A fol. 95*a*. 1] Then "straightway we rose up and departed unto the country of Egypt, and "Salome was with us.

"And it came to pass when the morrow had come that Herod "commanded them to slay the children in Bethlehem and in all the borders "thereof and in all the districts thereof, according to what he had been "informed by the Magians, and according to the word of Satan, the father "of all iniquity. So we rose up [and went] on our way, and Joseph was "in front of me. And I carried my Child sometimes on my shoulders, "and sometimes on my back, and sometimes in my arms, and by reason "of the length of the way, and the weariness of the journey, Salome "[carried Him] for me in turn. Then, sometimes, I set Him down upon "the ground that He might follow me, even as do women when they "teach their children to walk, for I was a little (or weak) woman, and it "had not been my wont to toil hard. And He would walk along a little "way at a time, holding on to the hem of my skirt, and then, like all "children who cry out to their mothers to carry them, He expected [A fol. "95*a*. 2] me to carry Him, and I did so immediately on my back. Then "I would embrace Him, and would rejoice in His walking, and at the "same time I cast imprecations upon Herod, and cursed him and all "his kingdom because he had treated innocent and sinless children in "such a cruel manner, and had slain them, and had put sorrow into "the breasts of their mothers and fathers. Now when Joseph saw "Salome carrying the Child upon her shoulders he would take our food "for the way.

"And it came to pass that when we arrived in the country of Egypt, "we sat down outside a city, under the shadow of a tree, that we might rest "from the heat of the sun, for the season was summer and the day was "the twenty-seventh of the month Genbôt[1], and Joseph and Salome slept "by reason of the weariness of the way, [A fol. 95*b*. 1] but I suckled my "Child. Now His apparel was like unto wine, being the same as mine

"own wherein my father and my mother arrayed me when they brought "me into the house of the sanctuary, and since the time when I first put it "on I had never taken it off, and the sandals which were on the feet of my "Son were like unto gold. And behold, on that road [we met] two thieves, "one of whom belonged to the country of Egypt, and the other to the coun"try of the Hebrews. And the Hebrew said unto the Egyptian, 'I desire to "'carry off the apparel of this woman and that of her Son, for it is like unto "'royal raiment. If I could meet them in the desert I would take it, but "'they are nigh unto a city.' Then the Egyptian said unto his fellow, "'Let them alone and let us depart, for I have not seen such a Child as "'this [A fol. 95*b*. 2] since I was born'. Now whilst they were talking in "this wise I took out my breast and suckled the Child, for I wished to "give Him milk to drink. Then I looked round about me and found "them not, and I rose up and took the Child into the city and asked the "women thereof to give Him some water to drink; but there was none "who gave me any, for the people of that city were without mercy. Now
"when the thieves saw that I had gone away they came back, and going "unto the place where Joseph was sleeping, they carried off the shoes of "my Son. And when I returned I woke up Joseph and Salome, and "I said unto them, 'Rise up, and let us depart from this city, for the people "'thereof have no mercy'; and I sought for water and there was none who "gave me any, but I lost nothing except the sandals of my Son which the "thieves had taken [A fol. 96*a*. 1]. Now as I said these words I wept, and "when my beloved Son saw my weeping He sought [to wipe away] my "tears with His hand; and He put His fingers down into the ground a "little way, and forthwith beautiful water welled up[1], and we drank there-

After [his stay here], our Lord Christ blessed the water of the aforesaid well, because He and His mother and their companions had drunk of it; so that every one who went to it in faith and drank

"Then He made the sign of the cross over the water, and said, 'Let this "'water be unto every one who wisheth to drink therefrom healing and "'pleasant, except unto the people of this city; unto them let it be as "'gall in their mouths, and let not any one of them have benefit therefrom'. "Then when we had eaten a little food I took my beloved Child upon "my back, and we rose up to depart.

"And straightway their temples fell down in the twinkling of an eye, "and not one of them was left [standing], and the idols thereof were "broken [A fol. 96*a*. 2] and dashed to pieces; and in like manner the "gods thereof were thrown down, one upon the other, and were broken. "Now, as we were making our way up into Egypt the mountains and "the wild beasts came and worshipped my Son, and when we journeyed "onwards they also journeyed with us. Then my Son turned towards "them, and placing His right hand upon the mountain which was towards "the East, and His left hand upon the mountain which was towards the "West, said unto them, 'Stand ye still, and behold, make firm your roots "'(literally hand) deep in the rock like things fastened therein'; and thus "do they appear unto us until this day. And He said unto them, 'Be ye "'a sign unto those who shall not believe in Me and unto those who shall "'deny My coming, and unto the sinful Jews, and unto Herod the accursed "'and his kingdom, [A fol. 96*b*. 1] and unto all those who shall not believe "'in My holy Name'. And He said unto those mountains, 'Ye have recog- "'nized Me and ye have believed in Me, O things which have neither "'soul nor body, but the kings whom I have created in Mine own form "'and likeness believe not in Me and they will not render homage unto "'My glory. Those for whose sake I have come into the world will

"'neither pay honour unto Me nor receive Me; nay, they seek to slay Me, "'and at length I have been [obliged to] come and arrive in this country.
"'But My Name and that of My pure mother shall be magnified and "'glorified from generation unto generation.'

"And next we arrived in the city of Eshmûnên[1], where in the fore"part of the gate was a huge building which, with its four towers[2], reared
"itself above the city, and it, too, fell down and was broken, [A fol. 96*b*. 2]
"because they worshipped idols therein. Then our Lord Jesus said, "'Thou shalt be the sign (or memorial) of this city and of the people
"'[thereof] for ever'; and this took place even as He said, for the fortress "became a ruin unto this day. Now there was a tree in that place, and "it bowed down at the feet of my Son and said unto Him, 'Prosperous
"'be Thy coming, O Jesus, Thou Son of God'[3]; and the Lord answered "and said unto it, 'No worm shall ever enter into thee, and thou shalt "'keep in memory My coming into this city to-day'. And all the people,

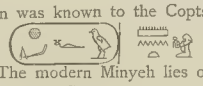
[1] I. e., the famous city called by the Arabs أُشْمُون, or الأُشْمُونين, (see Yâḳût, tom. I. p. 283), by the Copts ⲡⲓⲙⲛϩⲏⲛⲓ, which is, of course, only a form of the ancient Egyptian name of the city  , or  Khemennu, i. e., the city of the "Eight" great gods. The Greeks gave to the city the name Hermopolis Magna, because the Egyptians there worshipped Thoth, the scribe of the gods, who was called by the Greeks Hermes; it was the capital of the fifteenth nome of Upper Egypt. A little distance from the town is the spot where large numbers of the mummified ibis, a bird sacred to Thoth, were buried. The ancient city lay on the western bank of the Nile, inland, a little to the south-west of the modern Rôḍa, about one hundred and eighty-two miles south of Cairo. In the times of classical writers the city consisted of two parts, each of which bore the same name; hence the dual form of the name in Arabic, and the Coptic form ⲡⲓⲙⲛϩⲏⲛⲓ ⲛ̀ⲟⲩ. The district in which the city was situated was commonly called the 'Island', because it was almost surrounded by the waters of the Nile and of the canals which flowed from it; it was famous for its gardens and for its abundant palm trees (ذات بساتين ونخل كثير). See AMÉLINEAU, Géographie de l'Égypte, p. 167; Quatremère, Mémoires Géographiques et Historiques sur L'Égypte, tom. I. p. 492 ff.; 'Abd al-Laṭîf, (ed. Sacy) pp. 66, 67.

[2] It is probable that the writer here refers to the pylons of one of the temples of the god Thoth; the ruins of such a temple existed in the time of Abû Ṣâliḥ the Armenian (ed. Evetts and Butler, p. 221).

[3] "Outside the church there is a Syrian tree bearing [the fruit called] sebestan, which is of a red colour. The tree stands near the ancient temple; and when the Lord with the Lady passed by it, it bowed its head in adoration to him. The governor of the town wished to cut it down; but the patriarch Agatho was standing under the tree, and when the woodman struck it with his axe, the axe flew back into his face." Abû Ṣâliḥ, op. cit., p. 222.

"from the greatest to the least, marvelled at the glory which was on my "Son, and said, 'We have never at any time seen a child like unto this'. "Now as we were passing on through one of the squares of the city, "behold five camels [A fol. 97*a*. 1] crowded us on the road, and when "my Son saw them He said unto them, 'Stand still', and they became "stones even unto this day.[1] And there was a certain man whose name "was Teflem, upon whom was the mercy of God, and he received us "and made us to abide in his house; and all the idols [therein] fell down "and were broken in pieces. Then all the ministrants of the gods were "afraid, and they hid themselves in their houses. Now when the morning "had come all the people gathered themselves together to the place "wherein we were, and [among them] were many who were dumb, and "deaf, and sick of every kind of disease. And my Son laid His hand "upon them and healed them of all their sicknesses, and He wrought "in that city many miracles, the which if I were to tell thee no paper "[A fol. 97*a*. 2] would be sufficient to contain [the story of] them. Then "multitudes of people came to us and pressed upon us, by reason of the "miracles which He wrought that day.

"And we departed from that place and came unto a city the name "of which is Pantôs[2], and the inhabitants thereof were lovers of men and "we abode there; and my Son wrought miracles without number therein. "And He said, 'My Name, and the name of My mother MARY, shall be



[1] "It is said that there was on the highest point of the town a cock, and beneath it a row of dromedaries. When a stranger approached the town the cock crowed, and the dromedaries came out to destroy that stranger. But when our Lord Christ, to whom be glory! came to this town, the cock crowed and the dromedaries went out, according to their custom; and when they saw the Lord Christ and the Lady, and Joseph the carpenter, they worshipped them; and on the spot they were changed into stone; and their number was five. On this island there are three hundred villages. Our Lord Christ entered [the town] by the eastern gate. Here the dromedaries worshipped him." Abû Ṣâliḥ, op. cit, pp. 220, 221.

[2] Abû Ṣâliḥ (ed. Evetts and Butler, p. 222) mentions a place called "Funkus", where there was a church dedicated to one of the martyrs; it is possible that the Ethiopic ፋንቱስ and the Arabic فنكس represent one and the same place.

"'in this city even unto the most remote days'; and they brought those "who were suffering from sickness and diseases unto Him, and in His "abundant mercy He healed them. And a certain artificer (or black-"smith), whose name was Joseph, heard [of these things], and he came unto "us — now he belonged to [one of] the greatest families in Jerusalem — and "he made the old man Joseph and us also to take up our abode in his "house; and he had a son who was possessed of a mighty devil. And "it came to pass on that day that his devil returned unto him, and as "soon as he saw Him, he cried out to the Child, and said, 'What have I "'to do with Thee, O Jesus, [A fol. 97*b*. 1] the Nazarene? Hast Thou "'come unto us to judge us? We left Jerusalem through Thee and fled "'unto this city, and Thou hast followed after us to judge us, for indeed "'Thou art the Son of God.' Then Jesus said unto him, 'Make an end "'[of thy words] and go forth out of him'; and straightway the young "man recovered from his sickness. And he and his father and his mother "rose up and worshipped [Jesus], saying, 'Blessed are we, in that we have "'been considered worthy of this act of grace above all [other] folk, for "'although we are sinners Thou hast come into our house'; for when we "had entered the blessing of God came unto them. And when they saw "the miracle which the Lord Jesus had wrought many people in that "place believed. Then the nobles of the city enquired of the [A fol. 97*b*. 1] "priests of the gods, and said unto them, 'Wherefore do ye hide your-"'selves and forsake your gods?' And they said, 'From the time when "'this woman and her Child came into [the city] the idols have been "'broken in pieces and the temples of the gods have fallen down; and "'although we visit them at night [and find them whole], yet in the morning "'are they dashed to pieces.' And they sent for us to take us to them, "but we went up into the uppermost story of the house. Then they seized "the master of the house, and took him before the nobles of the city, who "said unto him, 'Where are the people who were living in thy house?'

"And he said unto them, 'It is three days this day since they departed "'from my house, and I know not where they are'; then they chastised "him, but he said nothing whatever except, 'I know not where they are'. "Now when he had come forth he told me what had taken place before "the [A fol. 98*a*. 1] elders of the city.

"And in the morning we departed from them and we arrived at a "city the name of which was Ḳuesyâ[1], and therein was a temple whereon "stood a statue [which was approached] by seven steps. Now those "who ministered [unto this statue] allowed no man except the nobles of "the city to enter into [the temple], and the statue was wont to go forth "and to bow before those who gave possessions [unto the priests]. And "it came to pass that when we had arrived at the gates of the city the "seven steps of the pedestal and the statue above them fell down to the "ground, and were broken in pieces. Then the devil which was in the "statue cried out and said unto the priests, 'If ye do not go unto this "'woman and her Son, and the old man who travelleth with her, and the "'woman [Salome], and drive them away whensoever they would enter "'into this city, [A fol. 98*a*. 2] your calling shall be destroyed, and in three "'days' time they will make you to go forth [from your temple]. And I "'tell you that they will come into your country, for [the Christians] seek "'[to enter into] all the countries of Egypt, and when they have [once] "'entered into this city the temple of the gods shall be overthrown, and "'the work of our city shall be destroyed, and our enemies shall rise up "'against us and make an end of our city, and our glory shall be cast to

[1] The town here referred to is probably the Munyatu ibn al-Khuṣêb مُنْيَةُ ابن الخُصَيْب (see Yâḳût, tom. IV. p. ٦٧٥), which, according to Abû Ṣâliḥ (op. cit., p. ٩٧), was formerly called Munyatu bû Ḳais (تعرف قديمًا بمنية بو قيس). It contained several churches, two dedicated to the Virgin MARY, one to Saint George, one to Saint Michael, etc. The town was known to the Copts by the name ТШѠИН, which is a form of its ancient name in hieroglyphic  Khufu-ment; it was the metropolis of the sixteenth nome of Upper Egypt. The modern Minyeh lies on the west bank of the Nile, and is about one hundred and fifty-seven miles south of Cairo.

"'the ground.' Then when the priests of the gods had heard these things, "they counted one hundred men [who] came against us with sticks and "staves, and they cursed and abused us exceedingly, and said, 'What "'want ye here with us? Get ye gone, lest our soldiers come and slay "'you, for our gods have told us that our city shall be destroyed through "'you'; and their women and children [A fol. 98*b*. 1] came forth and "reviled and cursed us. Then I took my Son in my arms and departed, "being sorrowful, and I wept, and my heart was sad because the people "would neither receive us nor let us dwell [in their city].

"And it came to pass that when we had departed from the city my "Son turned and cursed that city, the name of which was Ḳuĕsyâ, and "He said unto the inhabitants thereof, 'Ye shall be the fewest in number, "'and the most feeble, and the most despised of all the peoples of Egypt; "'and nothing shall flourish in your land except labour, and the works "'of the sorcerer; and your country shall not be fertile; and your priests shall "'not multiply in numbers, but shall follow each other only one by one; "'and the blessing of My mother shall not be upon you, and according to "'that which hath gone forth from My mouth even so shall your land be.' "Then, having said these words, He went on His way. And we passed "onwards and sat down to rest ourselves a little [A fol. 98*b*. 2]. Now "there was a stick of olive wood in the hand of Joseph, and Jesus took "it in His holy hand, and planted it in the ground in that place, and said, "'It shall be a blessing unto the people of this place for ever, and a "'memorial of My journeying along this road'. Then straightway the "twigs on the stick budded, and became green, and it bore fruit even as "it had done upon the tree in times past. And we wished to go forward "on our way. Now there were many fields round about that place, and "Joseph, pointing with his finger, said, 'Unto what city shall we go? For "'the day hath waned into evening, and the night hath come'. And I said "unto him, 'Let us not journey on among the fields, but let us depart into "'the desert'. Then as we were going along by the side of a mountain "at the time of sunset, behold, the two thieves, [A fol. 99*a*. 1] whom we "had met before outside the city, who had followed us from thence "to this place, as soon as they saw us rushed upon us, with their swords, "which were drawn, in their hand. And they said, 'For many days ye "'have given us great trouble, for we have followed you, and we could not "'find where ye had gone until this day; and behold ye have now fallen "'into our hands'. And thus saying they snatched my beloved Son from "my hands, and they took off His raiment and mine also, and they carried "away the covering of my head; and they turned to Joseph, who was "[standing] like an innocent sheep, and snatched away his apparel also. "And it came to pass when Salome saw all those things that she cast "away her garments. [A fol. 99*a*. 2] Then having taken away our garments "the two thieves stood afar off, and held converse, the one with the other; "and when I saw them taking counsel together I was afraid with a great "fear, and I said in my heart, 'They will come to me next and will kill "'my Son'. And I lifted Him up in my hands, and as I wept I laid my "face upon His face, and said, 'Woe is me, O my beloved Son! Whi-"'ther shall I escape from this hour? Whither shall I run? I fled with "'Thee from Jerusalem through fear of the enemy Herod, lest they should "'kill Thee, O my beloved Son. O my Son, beloved one of my soul, it "'is better for me to go down into mine own country and to die than to "'see all [this] suffering. And behold, I am afraid lest those who are "'more wicked than Herod lay hands upon Thee. It is better for me to "'be in [A fol. 99*b*. 1] Bethlehem with those who know Joseph than to "'be making supplication unto them (i. e., the thieves) on Thy behalf that "'they slay thee not. O my beloved Son, it is a calamity unto me that "'I am a virgin and of no account, and that I know nothing of all these "'things. O Light of mine eyes, whom do I know in this country? And "'behold, I am in the wilderness, and I know neither place nor city whither

"'I can go. Where are all those who know me? All women who have "'borne children would weep with me if they saw this day the sorrow "'and the tribulation which have come upon me, and the fear which hath "'entered into my heart and mind this day. O my beloved Son, did not "'I endure hardship with Thee when I was fleeing lest evil should befall "'Thee, O Thou Light of mine eyes, and when they drove me from one "'place unto another and cast me forth from the city and from the fields
"'[round about]? [A fol. 99*b*. 2] O my Son, what shall I do if I see them "'kill Thee in this place? Great would be the sorrow which I should feel "'should I see it, and if they slay Thee here I shall kill myself with mine "'own hand. And what should I do for the sweet and lovely words which "'Thou dost speak unto us every day? What shall I do, O Thou Light "'of mine eyes, Thou Life of my soul and body? And when I see the "'women who are suckling their children at their breasts, I wish that the "'women, whose children Herod slaughtered, [taking them] from their "'very breasts [to do so], could weep for them this day with me. It would "'be better for me to be in Jerusalem or in Bethlehem, but then I should "'not find many to lament their children with me. Where are my holy "'fathers [A fol. 100*a*. 1] and the prophets, that they may weep with me
"'this day? I would that the angel who announced to me concerning Thy "'birth could see my lamentation, and that Elizabeth, who belongeth to "'my family, and her son John could be with me and see the sorrow of "'my heart. O Lord, have mercy upon me in the matter of my death, "'and be not silent concerning my sorrow.'

"Now whilst I was pouring out lamentation in this wise, and was "weeping, and my tears were streaming down my own cheeks and those of "my Son, one of the thieves saw me weeping, and his bowels were moved,
"and he spake unto the Jew, and said unto him, 'I beseech thee, O
"'my brother and companion, not to carry off the apparel of these way-
"'farers, for I see on their faces light which is greater than that on the faces

"'of all other people; and as for this Child He is like unto the son of a "'king, and I have never seen any other child [A fol. 100*a*. 2] that resem- "'bled Him'. And the Jew said, 'I will not hearken unto thee this day; "'but I will take their apparel, for it is the raiment of kings, and [the "'merchants] will give me much money for it.' And it came to pass that "when the Jew refused him [this request] and his companion was unable "to turn him, he said unto him, 'From the time when we were in Beth- "'lehem until this day we have robbed together, and last night we found "'much spoil; the portion which is my share shall be thine, and let me "'have the apparel of these wayfarers as my portion, so that I may give "'it back to them, for it is hard for me [to see] this Child standing more "'naked than any other child of man'. And when he had spoken in this "wise the Jew said, 'Take the apparel'; and he took it from him and gave "'it unto us, and I dressed my Son therein joyfully. Now when my beloved "Son saw him do this He made the sign of a seal over him with His "fingers, and the two [A fol. 100*b*. 1] thieves departed together. Then "Jesus said unto me, 'Seest thou these two thieves? They shall be crucified "'with Me, one on My right hand and one on My left, in Jerusalem by the "'Jews. And the thief on whom it hath been in My heart [to shew] the "'mercy of My Good Father is he who shall believe on Me on the wood "'of the cross, and he shall enter into the Garden (i. e., Paradise) at the "'head of Adam and his seed. And as for this place where they stripped "'Me naked, and where thou hast wept over My body with the sweet "'[tears] of thine eyes, it shall be a healing of every person who is sick "'and ill that washeth therein, and I will give them life because of the green "'grass and herbs which are in this [place]; and thy tears which have "'fallen upon My body and dropped upon the ground shall give them life, "'and they shall come to their own countries with joy and gladness.'

"And having said these words [A fol. 100*b*. 2] the night became dark, and Joseph admonished me and said unto me, 'I wish that we

"'journey on into this city, for because thou wouldst not listen unto me "'we have come into this desert, and darkness hath fallen upon us, and "'I do not know where we are going; but God hath delivered His people, "'for if He had not the thieves would have killed us.' Now at this moment "my beloved Son looked into Joseph's face, and said unto him, 'Speak "'not in this wise to My mother, O father. It was the wish of the Good "'[God] that I should perform the act of becoming man; it is not you "'who must give commands unto Me, for it is I Who give commandments "'unto the whole world. But I will go whithersoever thou wishest.' And "having said these words we went up into a mountain, and we entered "into this house, and I stood in the midst thereof, and I put my Son down "upon the ground from my bosom. And it came to pass when He stood "up upon His holy feet upon the ground, He lifted up His hands, [A fol. "101 a. 1] and at that moment the house shone with light as if the sun had "risen therein, and I gave thanks unto God Who had delivered us and "brought us to this place, and had delivered us from the doers of iniquity "and violence. And we abode therein joyfully and blessed God the whole "night long. Then in the morning we found a cistern of water, and we "rejoiced because we could drink and wash the Child, and I took Him "to the cistern, and He put forth His fingers and blessed it, and it became "full of water. And straightway He opened His mouth and blessed it, "and said, 'Be thou sweet in the mouth of everyone, and be thou like "'unto a stream [that floweth from] the river of the country of Egypt (i. e., "'the Nile). And it shall heal everyone who shall be a believer in the "'true faith and in it of [his] sickness or disease when they gather them-"'selves together in [this] house.' [A fol. 101 a. 2] And we dwelt with the "Child and Joseph, and Salome went round about the house and found "a bowl and a bucket which they had prepared for us; and she was "washing the Child continually, and I suckled Him at my breasts. Now "they brought me my food from God, and continually I saw the angels

"and the hosts of heaven worshipping at the feet of my beloved Son, "whilst my breast was in His mouth. And they said in their own lan- "guages, 'Blessed be Thou, O God, Who hast come in this lowly state to "'give life unto Adam and unto his seed, because they are the work of "'Thy hand and Thou hast fashioned therein Thine own image and "'likeness. And blessed be He Who hath the preeminence, the Word "'Who hath proceeded from the mouth of the Father, the Upholder of "'the universe. And honour be unto the Holy Virgin who was in labour "'with Thee in giving Thee birth.' So we tarried there, and we rested "from the toil which had come upon us, [A fol. 101*b*. 1] and the angels "came and ministered unto us and made supplication unto us."

O my holy Lady, thou two-fold Virgin MARY, who didst give birth to God, whose testimony is sweet, may thy prayer and thy supplication be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE POTTER.

[B fol. 69*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḥâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Hearken, O ye my fathers and brethren, that we may declare unto you the great miracle which took place through our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and which the holy fathers have narrated unto me, and God is my witness that I add nothing thereunto, and that I take nothing therefrom. And they told us: — In the country of Syria there dwelt a certain man who was a potter, and he feared God, and loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and he gave praise unto her from the depth of his heart. And our holy Lady [B fol. 69*b*. 2], the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, appeared unto that potter at dawn, on the second day of the week, in great majesty, and she was arrayed in light, and angels were following her. And she said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O my beloved one, "thou beloved one [of my Son], I have come unto thee that thou mayest "multiply thy praises of me, and that they may become for me an ever-"lasting memorial". Then he said unto her, "O my Lady, I am a worn "out man and a castaway, how can I praise thee [adequately]? but bless "thou me with thy holy hand, O thou storehouse of blessing". Then she said unto him, "The blessing of my Son, and the blessing of His Father, "and the blessing of the Holy Spirit be with thee! Amen."

And it came to pass that when she had thus spoken unto him the Holy Spirit [B fol. 70*a*. 1] came upon him in full measure, and he opened his mouth, and said, "God wished to set Adam free from grief and sor-"row of heart, and He brought him back to the position which he held "aforetime"; and he recited the canticle of MARY for the second day of the week unto the end thereof, and the Holy Spirit spake by his lips. And when he had finished praising her, our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, blessed him, and saluted him, and gave him the salutation of peace, and went up into heaven with great glory. Then again on the third day she came unto him, and she said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O my beloved, thou shalt sing my praises "this day even as the Holy Spirit shall teach thee". And he said unto her, "Bless me"; and she blessed him, and he opened his mouth [B fol. 70*a*. 2] and said, "O thou crown in which we exult, thou woman who hath the "preeminence, our salvation, the foundation [on which we build], is our "holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God"; and he recited the canticle [for the third day] unto the end thereof. And she rejoiced, and blessed him, and gave him the salutation of peace, and went up into heaven with great glory. Then again on the fourth day our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, came unto him, and she said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O thou man "of God". And she blessed him and said unto him, "Sing thou my "praises according to thy wont". Then he opened his mouth, and said, "All the hosts of heaven say, 'Blessed art thou, O thou second heaven "'Who art upon earth, our holy Lady the two-fold Virgin [B fol. 70*b*. 1] "'MARY who gavest birth to God, thou second heaven"'; and he sang the canticle [of the fourth day] unto the end thereof. And similarly on the fifth day she came unto him, and he praised her, saying, "The tree which "Moses saw in a flame of fire in the wilderness, the branches whereof "were not consumed, doth resemble our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God", and he sang the canticle [of the fifth day] unto the end thereof. Then again on the Eve of the Sabbath our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, appeared unto him, and she sat upon a shining throne, and said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O my beloved, sing thou my praise with thy "sweet songs". And he said unto her, "Blessed art thou above women, "and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, O Virgin who didst give birth to "God" [B fol. 70*b*. 2]; and he sang the canticle [for the sixth day] unto the end thereof, and she blessed him, and made him to rejoice, and went up to heaven with great glory. Then in like manner on the first day of the week, the Sabbath, our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, came and said unto him, "Joy be unto thee, O my "beloved, and peace"; and rising up he bowed down in adoration unto her. Then she said unto him, "Sing thou my praises this day also, even "as the Holy Spirit shall give thee understanding [how to do]". And he said unto her, "Bless me"; and she blessed him, and he opened his mouth, and said, "The woman who is pure, and radiant, and holy in everything "did clasp God in her hand, and all created things do rejoice with her,

"and cry out and say, 'Rejoice, O thou that art full of grace, rejoice, for "'thou hast found favour, rejoice, for God is with thee'". [B fol. 71*a*. 1] And it came to pass that when he had made an end of praising her, she saluted him and went up into heaven with great glory. Now when the evening of the Sabbath had come he drank wine and fell asleep. And when it was midnight our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, appeared unto him, and said, "Why didst thou not "praise me to-day with praises more than those of the other days? For "the praises thereof should be more than all the praises [of the other days]." And he said unto her, "O my Lady, this day is the Sabbath "of rest, and men do no work therein". Then she said unto him, "Rise "up, and fear not, and stand in the place of thy labour, and whatsoever "the Holy Spirit shall give thee understanding to say, that say". Then rising up he received a blessing from her, and he kissed [B fol. 71*a*. 2] the cross which was in her hand, and he stood up in the place of his labour where he was wont to fashion his vessels of clay. And he opened his mouth and said, "Thou hast been called 'love', O most blessed "of women, and thou art the second moon who art called 'holy of holies' "wherein are the Tables of the Covenant". Then he sang three canticles unto her and continued so to do until the morning. And when the morning had come she blessed him and said unto him, "Joy be unto thee, "O my beloved one; as thou hast caused me to rejoice and hast sung "praises unto me upon earth, even so will I make thee to rejoice in the "kingdom of heaven. As thou hast commemorated me by singing my "praise upon earth, even so will I give unto thee as the reward of thy "labour the joy which never endeth in the kingdom of heaven," [and this she did] according as she had led him to hope. And now, [B fol. 71*b*. 1] O my beloved brethren, see how great is the love which God hath and how great is the love which our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, hath towards the sons of men for the sake of a little praise; and see, too, that by reason of a few good works our Lady will come down from heaven to him that loveth her and celebrateth her memorial. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with her servant Ḫâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Unto thee are meet praising and glorifying
In the mouth of the angels and of men who dwell everywhere, O MARY the Virgin, O MARY of the sweet-smelling mouth!
Like the potter who was beloved by thee I offer unto thee salutation,
And the commemoration of thy name [B fol. 71*b*. 2] which is more pleasant than sweet odours.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE MAN WHO WAS WASHING HIS GARMENTS.

A MIRACLE OF OUR LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḫâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man who was washing his garments [in a stream], and another man came and turned aside the water thereof into another channel. And the man who was washing his garments said unto him, "By the prayer of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, Who gave birth to God, let this water alone"; but the other man took it away by force, and he cursed him that was washing twice and thrice, and refused [to let the water alone]. And at that moment the water turned backwards, and flowed up the hill; and all the people gathered together [to see it], and they marvelled at what had taken place. Now the water remained thus [B fol. 72*a*. 1] for many days, and then, by the will of God, the river returned to its former bed. May the supplication of the Lady of us all and the might of her help be with her servant Ḥâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND TIMOTHY THE MONK.

A Miracle of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin Mary, who gave birth to God. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḥâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain monk whose name was Timothy, and he was a steward of the church, and he loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin Mary, who gave birth to God. And it fell out on a day that he drank some sweet wine, and he fell asleep and was unable to rise up [B fol. 72*a*. 2] at midnight for prayer. And when he awoke from his wine in the morning he rose up to go to the church, and as he was on his way thither there came against him a lion, which roared at the monk and wished to rend him. Then straightway a lady shining with exceedingly brilliant light came, and admonished the lion, and she drove him away from the monk, who went on his way to the church, marvelling at the lady who had delivered him from the lion. And when he had finished his prayer, he went to his work until the evening; and when the darkness had come he wished to go to the place where his bed was, and rest. Then straightway a mad dog rose up against him from the door of his house, and he sprang upon him to bite him; and again [B fol. 72*b*. 1] that shining lady came, and she drove away the dog. Then she brought the monk into his sleeping room, and laid him upon his bed, and placed his pillow under his head; and she covered him over with his blanket and made the sign of the cross over him. Then the monk said unto her, "O my Lady, I beseech thee to tell me, Who art thou?" And she said unto him, "I am MARY, the mother of Jesus Christ"; and when he heard her words he wished to bow down before her, and to embrace her feet, but she straightway disappeared from him. And he rose up in the morning and meditated in his heart concerning what he had seen, and he knew that the lion and the dog were of the deceits of Satan, and he became certain that it was our holy Lady, [B fol. 72*b*. 2] the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, the compassionate one who extendeth help unto those who serve her, who had delivered him. Then he repented that he had been drunken with wine, and he never again turned to strong drink. And he yoked himself unto God and performed [his] ministrations in the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, all the days of his life. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḫâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND NICODEMUS THE HORSEMAN.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with her servant [B fol. 73*a*. 1] Ḫâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man who was an envoy of the king, and he was a Persian and belonged to the company of the horsemen, and his name was Nicodemus; now he sinned abundantly, and his offences were without number, and he committed fornication with lewd women beyond measure, and he was evil in all his ways. But through the intercession of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, the mercy of God visited him, and she had compassion upon him and delivered his soul, and he repented of his sins, and forsook all the evil of his works, and turned unto God with a ready heart; and he cast away the lust of the flesh, and became a monk in a certain monastery. [B fol. 73*a*. 2] And the good and gentle prior undertook to train him himself, and he wished to teach him the Psalms of David, so that he might pray them at the seasons of prayer, but the monk was unable to learn [them]. Then again the prior wished to teach him [the prayer], "Our Father which art in heaven", and he was unable to master it. And it was only by means of abundant toil and trouble that he learned to say, "Salutation to our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God". Now he loved this prayer, and he recited it always and continually, both by day and by night, in his sitting down and in his rising up, in his coming in and in his going out, and he repeated it incessantly. And it came to pass that after he had died and had departed from this fleeting world, a great miracle was made manifest [B fol. 73*b*. 1] at his grave. A splendid tree, which was more beautiful [than any other tree], and unto which no other could be compared, took root and grew up over his grave, and on the leaves thereof were written words in gold ink which said, "Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY". And those who saw this miracle marvelled greatly at the beauty of the tree in every part of it, and they found that it was planted in the heart of the man, and that it had put forth its shoot through his tongue and through his mouth. Then they knew that he had lived with a pure heart and sincere mind whilst he prayed the prayer of Salutation unto our Lady MARY. And forthwith they all cried out together with a loud voice, and they glorified God and gave praise unto our Lady MARY, the storehouse of compassion, and they multiplied their ministrations unto her [B fol. 73*b*. 2] and paid greater honour unto her than before. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Ḥâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

O my Lady MARY, as thou didst choose Nicodemus the envoy,
A man who had committed multitudes of sins and offences,
To praise thee with a pure heart and with a sincere mind,
Even so choose thou me to perform good deeds of every kind,
I, thy servant, Ḥâyla Mâryâm, for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XL.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE ROMAN PREFECT.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer, and her blessing be with her servant Ḥâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain man in the city of Jerusalem who was a Roman prefect, and he came [B fol. 74*a*. 1] to pray at the grave of our Lord Jesus Christ; and when he wished to go in, there came a horned animal in the form of a ram to butt him with his horns, and he was afraid to turn behind him. Then the priest who was in charge of the grave, and those who were with him, said unto him, "What hath happened unto "thee, O master, that thou goest not in?" And he said unto him, "Where-"fore dost thou bring a ram in here?" And when those who were there had gone in they told the priest not to bring in the ram. And it came to pass that when the prefect drew nigh to enter in the ram came [against him] a second time; but no one saw him except the prefect. Then the priest said unto him, "O master, tell me if there be aught concerning thee "which should prevent thee from entering into this holy place. If thou "wilt believe in God thou shalt go onwards. But peradventure He Who "hath shewn thee this miracle [B fol. 74*a*. 2] desireth thy salvation." And the prefect told him concerning his sins, and he wept and wished to enter in, but the ram restrained him. Then the priest of the grave said unto him, "Is there some matter in connexion with thee which holdeth thee "back?" And the prefect said unto him, "Peradventure it is because I am "one of the council of judges". And when the prefect had believed he went in and partook of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he forsook the habits of a former time, and accepted in confidence the holy faith of the Church, and he believed on our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, who is the mother of the Ram of mystery, whose Son in the form of the Ram (or Lamb) of God, the Merciful One, Who provideth means for the salvation of men, kept him back when he would have entered in to the grave [of our Lord]. O my Lady, He hath set thee for the salvation [B fol. 74*b*. 1] of the whole world, for God the Lord put on the flesh of man through thee in the land of mortal beings, and He sent forth life, and pursued after sin, and drove away the darkness. O my Lady, I adjure thee by the Might of the Most High which overshadowed thee, and by the Son Who became incarnate by thee, and by the Holy Spirit Who came upon thee and sanctified thee, and Who placed Himself on thine heart like a ring, and like a seal upon thine arm, to protect me thy servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XLI.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND PHILOTHEUS THE BISHOP.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain Bishop, whose name was Philotheus, in the country of Sa'îd, that is to say, in Upper Egypt, and he was a good man, and his whole disposition was good, and he did good works, and he was right in the faith of Christ, and he judged righteously and accepted not the face of [any] man. Now he loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, from the depth of his heart, and he served her with all his might; and by reason of his love for her he was wont to put sackcloth on his body beneath his apparel. And it came to pass when the sackcloth had become old that he wished to make another garment of sackcloth [to wear] in its stead, and he took the unsewn sackcloth and went into his cave that he might cut out the garment from it, and sew it up, and put it on himself in secret without any man knowing what he did. [B fol. 75*a*. 1] Now when he had sat down in his cave he wondered how he could by any means make the garment, for he knew not either how to cut it or how to sew it up. And whilst he was troubling himself about this matter our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, appeared unto him, and she said unto him, "Be not thou troubled, for thou hast made me to "rejoice by thy good works, and thy toil and labour have been accepted "by me; I will cut this sackcloth into a garment for thee". Then she took the sackcloth from him and cut out a garment therefrom, and she sewed it up for him, and put it on him. And the Bishop rejoiced with great joy and gave thanks unto our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, with his whole heart, and he glorified her Son Jesus Christ our Redeemer. May her prayer, and her blessing be with her servant Herakles [B fol. 75*a*. 2] for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XLII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE FOUNTAIN OF WATER.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

[Here beginneth the history of the] miracle which our Lady MARY wrought with her Son on the eighth day of the month Sanê in the bath which is nigh unto the blessed water, and of how our Lord Jesus Christ made a fountain of water to spring up on their departure from the country of Egypt. Now when the angel of God had appeared unto Joseph in a dream, saying, "Arise, and take the Child and His mother, and depart "unto the country of Egypt", he rose up and took our holy Lady, the two-fold [B fol. 75*b*. 1] Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and they came unto the country of Egypt, and unto Mount Ḳuĕsḳuâm[1], and unto other places. And they took up their abode with the daughter of the sister of the mother of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God. And it came to pass that, when they had dwelt in the country of Egypt for three years and seven months, Herod died, and the angel of the Lord commanded Joseph to return to Jerusalem. And when he had arrived at the city of Maḥarraḳâ[2], he came from thence to

[1] I. e., the city called Ḳûṣaḳum by Yâḳût (tom. iv. p. ٢٠١), who says that it was situated in Upper Egypt, on the western bank of the Nile; it probably marks the site of the ancient Egyptian city Qesqeset, Coptic ⲕⲱⲥ, or ⲕⲟⲟⲥ, the name of which survives in the modern Arabic قوص Kûs. The Arab town is, however, situated on the right or east bank of the Nile about sixteen miles north of Thebes. Some have thought that Al-Muḥarraḳ and Ḳuĕsḳuâm are names of one and the same place, but this is a mistake, for the two cities were quite distinct, though situated close together.

[2] The city is chiefly famous in Christian annals for being near the Monastery of Al-Muḥarraḳ, which, however, was built on Mount Ḳuĕsḳuâm. Yâḳût says (tom. ii. p. ٦٩٢) that it was situated on the western bank of the Nile on the top of a hill, that no building was finer than that of the monastery, Maṭaryâ[1], and from thence to the city of the bath; and whilst our Lord Jesus Christ was with His mother the Virgin MARY He made a fountain of water to spring up, and this fountain of water endureth until this day. And all people come thereunto, from every country and from every nation, and make intercession with our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and they receive a blessing from the church and from the fountain of blessed water. May the prayer and the blessing of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XLIII.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND JOHN KAMÂ.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain holy man whose name was John Kamâ, who from his youth up had sought after the love of Christ with great strivings; [A fol. 76 a. 1] and when he had grown up they betrothed unto him a young woman who was a virgin that he might marry her. But he made an agreement with her that they should preserve their virginity

دَيْرٌ مُحَرَّق and no people more learned than those who dwelt in it; he also mentions that the Christians believe that Christ dwelt there after He had come down into Egypt. On the modern monastery and its inhabitants, see AMÉLINEAU, Géographie de l'Egypte, p. 264.

[1] I. e., the المَطَرِيَّة of Yâḳûṭ (tom. iv. p. ٥١٢), a village which lies about five miles to the north-east of Cairo, and is built upon a part of the site of the ancient Egyptian city of Annu, or Heliopolis. Here grew the famous balsam trees, شجر البَلَسَان, from which the oil used in certain solemn ceremonies was obtained, and here, too, was the renowned عين شمس, or "Fountain of the Sun". See 'Abd al-Laṭîf (ed. de Sacy), p. 88; WANSLEBEN, L'Histoire de l'Église d'Alexandrie, pp. 88—93; and AMÉLINEAU, Géographie, p. 246.

until the day of their death, and they fulfilled their covenant. And it came to pass on a certain day, which was the night of the first day of the week, that our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, appeared unto John Kamâ in great glory, and the angels were going about with her. Now by reason of [his] fear he fell upon his face, but she raised him up, and said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O John Kamâ, who art beloved of my Son, and of His Father, and of the Holy Ghost! "Rejoice and be strong, for through thy patient endurance thou shalt "become a mighty man, and thou shalt vanquish the unclean spiritual "beings of might who set themselves against thee. And I will be with "thee [B fol. 76*a*. 2] until the will of God shall be fulfilled, and I will give "thee my protection, and my mercy shall preserve thee, and shall be with "thee for multitudes of generations. And they shall build a church in thy "name, and it shall be called by the name of myself and of my Son; and "no hostile person or foe shall enter into thy shrine; and the walls thereof "shall never be dug up; and thy sons shall walk in thy commandment, "and in thy teaching, and thy law, and they shall shew themselves loving, "the one to the other, and they shall live in purity and shall make offerings "unto thee. I will be with them for ever, and I will bless their service and "the work of their hands, and they shall inherit everlasting life with the "kingdom of heaven." Then she gave him three dînârs which were stamped with the sign of the Cross, [B fol. 76*b*. 1] saying, "Take these, "and put them in the chest of the church that they may be a blessing for "ever" (now they are there unto this day); and having said these words, she gave him the salutation of peace, and passed away and departed from him. Then John Kamâ rejoiced, and he sang the words of a Psalm, saying, "I have sought Thy face, Thy face, O Lord, I seek. Turn not "away from me Thy face, and be Thou a helper unto me; and cast me "not away so that I may do Thy will, O my Lord and God." Observe then, O my brethren, that our Lady MARY doth make herself a protector and a teacher of sinners, and she doth become the helper of the righteous, and it is by means of her intercession that they fulfil their strivings, and even the sinful she doth help and protect and deliver from out of the hand of Satan their enemy. [B fol. 76 b. 2] May thy prayer, and thy blessing, and the mercy of thy beloved Son be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XLIV.

THE ASSUMPTION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

And on this day also all the peoples of the Christians shall celebrate a festival in honour of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin Mary, who gave birth to God, for in it she received the Covenant of Mercy from her Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Whosoever shall celebrate her commemoration, and shall call upon her name, and shall give alms unto the poor, even [a cup of] cold water, [shall in no wise lose his reward].

Now after her Son had gone up into heaven, having taken upon Himself her pure flesh, he sat at the right hand of His Father, for He had fulfilled all the law of humanity, sin alone excepted, [B fol. 77 a. 1] and He had gained dominion over the pains of the cross by His own good will and pleasure which He performed for our salvation. He left the holy woman His mother in the house of John, the disciple whom He loved, as a precious charge which He committed to his care, saying, "Behold thy son", and to that disciple He said, "Behold thy mother". Then the Lady Mary dwelt [there], and she used to go unto the grave of her Son, that is to say Golgotha, to pray there. And when the Jews saw her they were filled with wrath and anger, and they wished to stone her, but God removed her from their sight. Then they took counsel together and set watchmen by His grave, so that she might not come there to pray, but she ceased not to go there each day, [B fol. 77*a*. 2] and the watchmen never saw her, for the brilliant covering of the glory of her Son enshrouded her, and every time [she went] angels came there to minister unto her. And her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, visited her continually, and He fulfilled for her everything which she asked [from Him. And He] took her up into heaven and shewed her the place where the righteous rest, and the abode of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And all the souls of the Fathers who had gone to their rest, from Adam even unto this present, received her, and they bowed down before her, saying, "Glory be to God Who "hath created thee for us flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone! Through "thee we have found salvation, and thou hast become a haven of life [and "refuge] from destruction through the incarnation [B fol. 77*b*. 1] of the Son "of God, [which took place] through thee." And from this place the angels took her and brought her unto her beloved Son, and unto His throne, and the brilliant covering of the flame of fire went up on the right hand and on the left. Then our Lord took her hand, and kissed her mouth, and said unto her, "Hast thou come, O thou who didst give Me birth?" And He raised her up upon the throne of His glory and made her to sit with Him. Then He told her of the joy and gladness which the eye hath not seen, nor the ear hath heard, nor the heart of man hath conceived, which He had prepared for her. And below the throne of glory she saw David her father, the king of Israel, together with the companies of the angels, and the prophets, and the souls of the righteous [standing like] walls and encircling them round about, and he was singing a psalm to his harp, and saying, [B fol. 77*b*. 2] "Hearken, O my daughter, "and behold, and incline thine ear; forget thou thy people and thy father's "house, for the King, Who is thy God, hath desired thy beauty[1]." And again, from this place the angels took her to shew her the place of doom, and they brought her to the border of the region of darkness which is prepared for Satan and his hosts, and for all those who walk in his ways. Then our Lady MARY said, "Woe be unto me! Who will tell the children "of men so that they may not come hither?" And the angel said unto her, "Fear not, O MARY, God is with thee, and shall be with those who "shall come after thee". Then the angels carried her and brought her back to her place, and from that time our Lady MARY remained [B fol. 78*a*. 1] exceedingly sorrowful on behalf of all sinners.

[And men shall celebrate a festival in honour of our Lady] because on this day, which is the seventeenth day of the month Yakâtît, she stood at the place of the skull (i. e., Golgotha), and made supplication unto her Son, saying, "I adjure Thee, O my Son, by God Thy Father, and by "Thy Name Christ, and by the Paraclete Thy Spirit, and by my womb "wherein I bore for nine months and five days Thee Whom the earth is "not able to contain and Whom to approach the angels are not able; I "adjure Thee, O my Son, by Thy going forth from me without weariness "and by Thy bringing forth which was without pain; I adjure Thee by "my breasts which suckled Thee and by my lips which kissed Thee; I "adjure Thee by my arms which embraced Thee, and by my feet which "walked about with Thee; I adjure [B fol. 78*a*. 2] Thee by the stable in "which Thou didst lie and by the swaddling bands wherein Thou wast "wrapped; O my Son and beloved one, I entreat Thee and I make sup- "plication unto Thee to hear the voice of my petition, and to come to me "and fulfil for me everything which is in my heart." And it came to pass that when our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, the mother of the Light, had spoken in this wise, our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ came down to her; and with Him were thousands of thousands, and tens of thousands of angels that surrounded Him. Then He said unto her, "What shall I do for thee, O MARY, My mother? And "what wish hast thou which thou wouldst that I should fulfil?" And our holy Lady the Virgin MARY answered and spake unto her beloved Son,

[B fol. 78*b*. 1] saying, "O my Son, my beloved One, my Saviour, my Hope, "my Refuge, my confidence is placed in Thee, and in Thee have I become "strong from my mother's womb, Thou didst cover me in the womb, and "Thou art my memorial at all times. And now, hearken Thou unto my "prayer, and incline Thine ear unto the voice of the entreaty of my mouth "which I shall speak unto Thee. I am Thy mother MARY, and I am "Thine handmaiden. Whosoever then shall celebrate the commemoration "of me, or shall build a church in my name, or shall clothe the naked, "or visit the sick, or feed the hungry, or give the thirsty to drink, or com- "fort the sorrowful, or make him that is sad to rejoice, or write a hymn "in praise of me, or call his child after my name, or sing a song of praise "on [the day of] my festival, reward Thou him, O God, [B fol. 78*b*. 2] "with a fair reward from Thyself the which eye hath not seen, nor ear "heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. I beseech "Thee, O Lord, and I make supplication unto Thee for all those who shall "believe in me, and set Thou them free from Sheol. Remember Thou the "hunger, and the thirst, and all the trials which came upon me with Thee." Then our Lord Jesus Christ answered and said unto her, "It shall be "even as thou sayest unto Me, and I will fulfil for thee all thy petition. "Did not I become man for thy sake? I swear unto thee by Myself that "thou shalt not find My covenant which I made with thee to fail." May her blessing be with her servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

Thou type of the [B fol. 79*a*. 1] Tables of Stone!
Unto those who call upon thy name in every place, O MARY,
Be tender of heart unto sinners,
Be tender of heart unto those who are sorrowful,
Be tender of heart unto those who are cast away. Amen.
Save thou thy servant Herakles for ever and ever! Amen.

CHAPTER XLV.

SALUTATIONS TO THE MEMBERS OF THE BODY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

1 MAY GOD THE FATHER, THE GIVER OF LIGHT, WHO BEING ONE IS YET THREE IN PERSON, WHO SHEWETH MIGHT IN HIS DIVINITY AND POWER, illumine the eye of mine understanding with the lamp of wisdom and the beauty of His splendour that it may see the face of the word of thy covenant as is meet, O MARY, the lady of all those who are below and above.

2 SALUTATION unto the memorial of thy name, O thou who dost resemble a star which is seen by the people, even when dark clouds have enveloped the light thereof. O thou covenant of God, MARY, [A fol. 101*b*. 2] thou hope of salvation, did not the mind of the first father find consolation in thee when he was driven forth from his garden (i. e., Paradise) in bitter sorrow?

3 SALUTATION unto the hair of thy head which is [like unto] a two-fold thread of purple filled with the dew of the things which are good and which is without blemish. O thou who art the covenant of mercy, MARY, which thou didst stablish before the congregation, entreat Him (i. e., God) to bestow the life of the soul as a gift of grace upon me after the manner of Elijah, for doth not He make me to live in the body?

4 SALUTATION unto thy head is meet from every created being, O MARY, because thou didst stablish a covenant with Him Who is and Who shall be. Now we have made a covenant with death and we have sworn an oath unto those who say: "They have spoken in vain and have destroyed their own souls".

5 SALUTATION unto thy face, O holy and glorious face, the splendour of which is sweeter than the splendour of the sun and moon. Thou wast the token of the covenant, MARY, and wast the shining bow in the cloud from God, the Merciful, when thou didst remove Noah from the destruction of the earth [and didst promise him that] there should be no more a flood.

6 SALUTATION unto thine eyelashes, which are set to guard the eyes, and to take the place of veils and coverings for them. O MARY, say thou unto Him to Whom thou didst give birth without carnal union with man, "Where is Thy word, O Lord, which said, 'For thy sake "I will have compassion upon sinners when they shall call upon thy "'name, which shall be proclaimed?'"

7 SALUTATION unto thine eyes which are like unto two lamps that have been suspended by a cunning workman in the exalted palace of [thy] body. O MARY, thou art the fountain of loving-kindness and compassion, save me, then, by thy word, and deliver me from destruction, for without thy help no one is able to save himself.

8 SALUTATION unto thine ears whereinto were announced the glad tidings by the mouth of the Creator, thy Son, that thy pearl should be protected. I adjure thee, [A fol. 102*a*. 2] O MARY, make thou me not to see the judgment without having done deed[s], for without them I cannot justify myself. Shall thy covenant have been made for nought?

9 SALUTATION unto thy cheeks which are like unto roses and pomegranates, the languor thereof is fire, and the tears thereof are mingled with flame; by thy covenant, O MARY, lift thou me up unto the Field of Delight. Woe be unto us, woe be unto us if the spirits (or minds) shall say in the judgment, "One is Aholibah and the other Aholah"[1].

[1] See Ezekiel xxiii. 4.

10 SALUTATION unto thy nostrils which are the double window of life, and which God fashioned in cunning beauty with His wise and understanding fingers. O MARY, hedge me round about with the power of thy covenant against temptation, and bruise thou his head with the rods of pain and disease when the Serpent yawneth with his mouth to swallow me up.

11 SALUTATION unto thy lips which have asked from God, the Merciful, on behalf of sinners, the Covenant of Mercy [A fol. 102*b*. 1] and a solemn oath on Golgotha, O MARY, when thou didst withdraw thyself from Galilee. The righteousness of thy covenant shall be a cause of festival unto each and every one. Lay thou upon the head of the sinner, thy servant, a crown.

12 SALUTATION unto thy mouth, the mouth of abundant blessing and the holy gate, the Book. I have taken refuge, O MARY, in thy covenant which hath been accepted, therefore let me be not put to shame before thy Son, and before His thousands of angels, when the root of the tongue shall be cut through and the mouth be sealed.

13 SALUTATION unto thy teeth which are like unto a flock of sheep which have been shorn and have gone forth from the bath[1] brilliantly white; take thou, O MARY, a tithe of thy covenant in the place of a gift from me. And let the arms of thy prayer do evil unto mine Egyptian adversary, which is the lust of his heart, and [let them bury him even as] Moses buried him in the sand[2].

14 SALUTATION unto thy tongue, O thou whom the priests of heaven, the Seraphim who stand before the [A fol. 102*b*. 2] Trinity, proclaim holy with continual songs of sanctification. Make thou me to remember, O MARY, the commemoration of thy covenant at the time of destruction, even as Joshua made Israel when in the desert to remember the covenant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the righteousness of Moses.

15 SALUTATION unto thy voice which returned speech unto the word of the angel of mystery, Gabriel, whose apparel shone with splendour, O MARY, thou holy woman of God, thou place of His power! Hail! Hail! For unto thee the Covenant of Mercy and His compassion were given that by means thereof sinners might be able to become righteous.

16 SALUTATION unto thy breathings, the breathings of health, which heal the souls of sinners, and those who have become wounded by the poison of the Serpent. By thy covenant, O MARY, do away my sins, for without thy covenant and the Cross of Christ, the Heir, there is no one who can deliver a man from Sheol.

17 SALUTATION unto thy sweet and beautiful throat, wherein are separated the [words] which are [A fol. 103*a*. 1] bitter and [those which are] sweet. What shall I do, O MARY? For my strength is worn out, and matters are hard for me on every side, and the world putteth me in sore straits; but comfort thou me, O mother, by means of thy covenant.

18 SALUTATION unto thy neck, the appearance of which is [like unto] the tower of David, and the foundation of which hath been laid by the wise on a lofty place[1]. O MARY, speak thou into the ear of my soul the words which will give her comfort. Wherefore then, doth the soul of Martha[2] weary itself overmuch? for it hath the power to find out only a little among what is very great.

19 SALUTATION unto thy noble shoulders which have received a blessing instead of a curse, and it abideth. O MARY, bear thou me with the righteousness of thy covenant upon thy shoulders, and take a tithe [on my behalf] from the flock of thy Son Alpha, for thou art my faith, and the hope of my heart.

[1] The LXX has ὁ ᾠκοδομημένος εἰς θαλπιόθ, which is intended to be the equivalent of the Hebrew בְּנוּי לְתַלְפִּיּוֹת; see Song of Solomon iv. 4. ተለፍዮት: is the Ethiopic transcription of the תַּלְפִּיּוֹת.

[2] See Luke x. 41.

20 SALUTATION unto thy back which was, in days of old, the resting place of God, in His weariness, on the road to Ḳuĕsḳuâm in the month wherein He was driven forth. O MARY, whosoever beareth thy name in addition to his own in the day of the Last Judgment, if His blood have not dominion, receive thou him [with] a tithe of [thy mercy], O thou merciful one, His mother.

21 SALUTATION unto thy breast, and unto thy bosom, and unto the twin arms thereof. I adjure thee, O MARY, by the blood which fell drop by drop at Golgotha, that thou make my soul [A fol. 103*a*. 2] to be worthy, with thine own soul, of a portion thereof, and let the dust of my earthly body be protected thereby.

22 SALUTATION unto thine arms, and unto thy fore-arms, and unto thy bosom wherewith thou hast embraced Christ, the pearl of divinity, the Hidden One. O MARY, thou chosen one, our mother of angels and men, if the sinner shall celebrate the commemoration of thee in firm faith let him reign with thee in the kingdom of heaven.

23 SALUTATION unto thy arms and wrists which wrought woven work, and made it beautiful with gold and purple threads, for the sanctuary of the God Who endureth for ever. O MARY, fulfil thou the Covenant of Mercy on me, and slay thou the enemy of my soul, for he is accursed, even as Solomon by his wisdom slew Sâmî (Shimei)[1].

24 SALUTATION unto the palms of thy hands which received the bread and the water which the angels of heaven brought unto thee when thou, O MARY, wast living in the great Sanctuary of the Law. If I give a handful of cold water to a poor and thirsty man to drink may it be received by thee, [through] thy covenant, as the sacrifice of a chosen evening.

[1] See I Kings ii. 46. "So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died".

25 SALUTATION unto thy fingers, and unto thy white nails, and unto thy two breasts which are the doors of the milk that is to be desired. O MARY, thou spring flower of thy time, I, the feeble one, have taken refuge in thy bosom, and by the might of thy covenant let me be delivered from the fire which is prepared.

26 SALUTATION unto thy flanks, which have been placed one on each side of thy body [A fol. 103*b*. 1], and whereon hath been set the brightness of gold which never passeth away. O MARY, embrace me and graciously set me at the side of thy covenant, whilst the sinners, who in their lifetime hated him that was a companion of the righteous, go down into the land of outer darkness.

27 SALUTATION unto thy belly, thy belly which is like unto that of the angels, and which is ever fed upon the bread of heaven according to its station and degree. O MARY, thou Zion of God, thou Ark of His Law, let the water of the lake of thy covenant cleanse me from the love of gold, for the love of riches is said to be the fore-father of Satan.

28 SALUTATION unto thy heart, whereunto shall be joined the reins, and unto thy power of feeling; and SALUTATION unto thy bowels, and likewise unto whatsoever is in thee. O MARY, thou pillar of cloud, bring me into the land of promise, and lead thou me on the way by the light of the fire of thy covenant, and in thy love feed me upon manna.

29 SALUTATION unto thy navel which is like unto a round goblet[1] in the midst of thy body; and SALUTATION unto thy pure belly, and unto thy blessed loins. O MARY, thou holy woman, who didst give birth to Christ-God, set thou a guard round about my soul until [it reach] the third heaven, when there standeth in the air a hostile angel who would become the adversary thereof.

30 SALUTATION unto thy virginity, wherein are included the five senses of the body, [A fol. 103*b*. 2] and unto thy two thighs, which are the pillars of the roof of the sanctuary. O MARY, thou Ark and Two Tables of stone of the New Covenant, anoint thou me with the balsam of fasting, from the head even unto the sole of the foot, for fasting healeth the pain of the soul.

31 SALUTATION unto thy knees when they are making propitiation and intercession, and SALUTATION unto thy feet which bow in adoration ceaselessly. O MARY, who hast become the companion of the Word of the Father, entreat thou Him to graciously bestow upon me the life of [my] soul, when all sinners shall be cast into the fire.

32 SALUTATION unto the soles of thy feet, and unto the insteps thereof, which walked to the Monastery of Ḳuěsḳuâm when the soldiers slew the children. O MARY, say thou unto the God of heaven, thou daughter of Ezra, Wilt Thou condemn in judgment the soul that loveth Thee in all its works because of thirty words?

33 SALUTATION unto the toes of thy two feet, and unto the nail which belongeth unto each of them. With the Covenant of Mercy, O MARY, hide thou that which should be hidden concerning me, and by the invitation of the tongue let another man who is mortal like unto myself drink my blood from a vessel.

34 SALUTATION unto thy stature which nourished the air of the virtues, and which bowed not itself before the storm of sin. O MARY, cover thou me over with the wing of thy covenant when the judgment shall take place; for if thy covenant be not a means [A fol. 104*a*. 1] of salvation for the soul of him that devoured men, who shall be able to deliver him?

35 SALUTATION unto thy person, more than unto the persons of Ḥannâ and Elisabeth, for the beauty thereof is of divers kinds, and its tender freshness is a thing apart [from that of other women]. O MARY, thou holy woman, who wast virgin within and without, let thy covenant be my redemption in the face of the Almighty Creator when He putteth an end to time, and when buying and selling cease in the market.

36 SALUTATION unto the going forth of thy soul, the fiery light [whereof] terrified the black angel when he saw it, and he was not able to frighten thee by his blackness. I adjure thee, O MARY, by the divinity of God, to deliver me by thy covenant from the threefold terror when death shall separate my soul from this my body.

37 SALUTATION unto thy body of flesh which did not remain on the bier, for the Spirit of Life of the Father raised it up quickly. O MARY, the salvation of righteous folk shall not be accounted a marvellous thing for thee to perform [A fol. 104*a*. 2] since thou dost save sinners by thy wise covenant; the saving of the righteous is a wonderful thing, but the saving of sinners is a hard thing.

38 SALUTATION unto the making ready for burial of thy body with linen swathings and myrrh by the hands of Peter, the man who uttered cries of joy. Be thou merciful unto me, O MARY, and say not unto me in the time of tribulation, "Wherefore dost thou give thanks for "my covenant, and for my help which keepeth in safety, and is the "anointing of sinners?" And I say, "Shall not I be anointed?"

39 SALUTATION unto thy grave, whereunto are gathered together all the nations and peoples of the earth whose boast thou art. O MARY, at the hour of death of that which is mortal in me come thou unto me; and when any Christian soul dieth wilt not thou thyself come quickly to give it consolation?

40 SALUTATION unto thy resurrection which was like unto the resurrection of Christ, for the gates of the tomb had been shut fast and they remained unopened. O MARY, thou art the beginning of the hope of Adam, and if thy covenant and prayer be not with him he must [A fol. 104*b*. 1] fall into the depth of perdition, both soul and body.

41 SALUTATION unto the departure of thy body unto the house of life, and the making thereof anew, whereunto the Body of thy Son had already departed. O thou who dost redeem the world, MARY, I entreat thee to redeem my soul by thy covenant, and let my wound be anointed with the medicine which shall heal it.

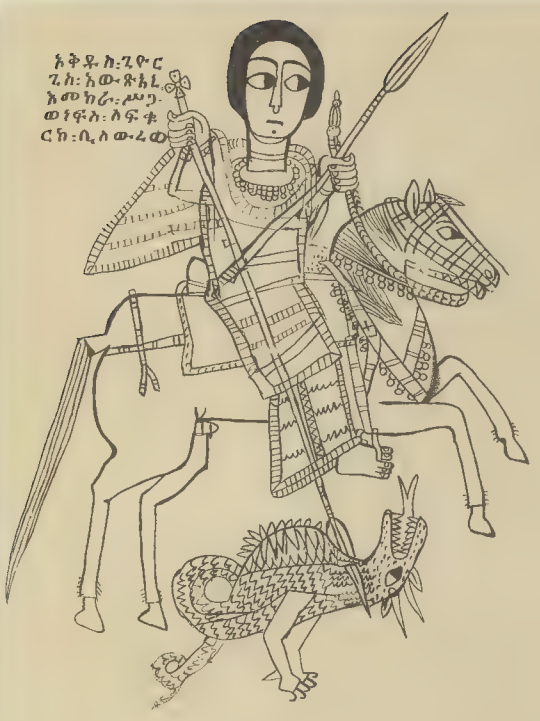
42 LET US GIVE THANKS unto God Who hath cried unto us with a cry, and let us celebrate the commemoration of thy covenant among the congregation of the afflicted ones. Whosoever shall recite this discourse two and forty times accept thou him, O MARY, at the Resurrection, and lay thou upon the head of his soul the sevenfold crown of the kingdom.

1 SALUTATION unto thee, O thou Covenant of Mercy, my hope, who dost justify the sinner, and dost seek after the one sheep of the ninety [and nine] which hath become cast away.

2 SALUTATION unto thee, [A fol. 104*b*. 2] O thou Covenant of Mercy, thou pillar which God hath planted; be thou a sign of salvation unto all sinners, O thou whose love giveth strength.

3 SALUTATION unto thee, O thou Covenant of Mercy, thou gold which comprehendeth all riches; thou art the storehouse of him that is poor and needy, and thou art the wealth of him that is in heaven.

4 SALUTATION unto thee, O thou Covenant of Mercy, who weighest the heavens in a balance, my trust is in thee; grant thou unto me both the strife and the overcoming thereof.



5 SALUTATION unto thee, O thou Covenant of Mercy, who art the pledge of the kingdom which is above; whosoever loveth thee shall live in hope until the resurrection of all shall take place.

6 SALUTATION unto thee. If I am unable to justify myself by good works and strivings, let me support myself in thee, O Virgin Covenant, who dost save my soul from perdition.

7 SALUTATION unto thee. Upon whatsoever servant of thine who shall build a temple in the name of thy covenant, and upon those of us who pray in thy name, O MARY, bestow a portion of thy blessing, and make supplication unto thy Good Son [on our behalf].

LADY MEUX MANUSCRIPT NO. 4.

THE HISTORY OF ḤANNÂ, THE MOTHER OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

[TO BE SAID ON THE SECOND DAY OF THE WEEK].

[Fol. 11*a*] IN THE NAME OF GOD THE FATHER, the Maker of the heavens and the earth, Whose Being cannot be comprehended by the heart of mortal man, the hidden One Whom it is impossible [for man] to describe, since He was the Word in the beginning, but He Himself comprehended His own Being; AND IN THE NAME OF GOD THE SON, Whose Being was mingled with [that of] His Father before the world was created, Who begot Him in a mystery before the universe was set in order, Who is equal in counsel unto God the Father and of like position; AND IN THE NAME OF GOD THE HOLY SPIRIT, Who sprang into being before [fol. 11*b*] the fountains of water went forth from the womb of the ocean, and before the light went forth from the great temple in the form of a spark to keep alive all created beings and things, both those which are visible and those which are invisible: To Him be praise and thanksgiving from the mouths of men and angels, and from the tongue of every created being and thing both on the earth and in the heavens, without silence and without ceasing, for ever and ever! Amen.

Open thou, O my Lord, the doors of my tongue, O Thou Who didst open the doors of the tongue of Ezra Sûtûêl[1] so that he might declare Thy greatness, and the greatness of our father Adam, whom Thou didst create in Thine own image and likeness, and didst bring into the Garden which Thy right hand did plant, [fol. 12*a*] when as yet the earth had not been stablished. Now I have the desire to declare the majesty of that Garden and of the earth, the earth because of Ḥannâ, and the Garden because of our Lady MARY, and the fruit thereof because of her Son, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! May the prayer of Saint Ḥannâ save Gabra Maryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER, AND THE SON, AND THE HOLY SPIRIT, ONE GOD: (may He redeem Gabra Maryâm by the prayer of Saint Ḥannâ!) I begin [to write the History of Ḥannâ] by the help of God, and by the gift of His grace, which is given unto each and every one according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Now it was He Who ascended [into heaven], and it was He Who descended [into hell], and [fol. 12*b*] it was He Who lived above the heavens that He might fulfill every thing, first for the Prophets, and secondly for the Apostles, and thirdly for the elders, and then grace and mercy were given unto us through Ḥannâ and Iyâḳêm (Joachim) who brought forth fruit for us, that is to say, the blessed, and pure, and holy woman MARY, like unto whom there is none in the heavens, nor on the earth.

Incline then your ears unto me with understanding, and I will declare unto you concerning the honourable estate of Ḥannâ. Now she was the daughter of noble parents who offered up offerings before God Almighty, and were Levites who belonged to the priesthood. Her mother was Faustina, who was of the house of Israel, and who before seven [fol. 13*a*] generations of daughters were born unto her, saw her descendants in a dream, and said, "The seventh daughter of my daughter shall bring forth "the blessed moon", that is to say, Ḥannâ, the wife of Joachim. Now the tabernacle of testimony which abode with our fathers in the desert God commanded Moses to make, according to the pattern which He shewed unto him when He said, "The Exalted One cannot dwell in the work of "the hand of man. Now the heavens are My throne, and the earth is My "footstool; where then is the house which ye can build for My habitation, "saith the Lord?"[1] And the temple which was builded and the tabernacle which was made in the days of Moses and of Solomon were intended for the abiding place of the Tables of the Law, on the sides of which the Law [fol. 13*b*] and the Covenant, that is to say the Ten Words, had been written by the fingers of God. Now the cuttings of the letters were like unto the foot [prints] of a man, and in appearance they were like unto sapphire, and they resembled the strength of heaven. In these (i. e., the tabernacle and the temple) did God make His feet to stand, and He hid His glory, and His voice only could be heard, even as He spake unto Moses, "No living man shall see My face[2], but I will hold converse with "him whom I love from out of the cloud". Because of this I say that the tabernacle of testimony is Ḥannâ, who made beautiful her works on the twenty[3] pillars thereof, on the right hand and on the left, on the west and on the east, and the things which were to come forth from each of these were to exist in order to complete [fol. 14*a*] the work which was to be wrought, so that it might be a memorial from generation unto generation, and for ever and ever. These are the gardens whence sprang Joachim and Ḥannâ. In the double [name] of Ḥannâ were many nations [included], for the peoples of Israel, in their various families and tribes, were linked unto her, and honour and majesty were ascribed unto them because of her. And thus was it with Joachim also, for all the peoples of Israel, in their various families and tribes, were reckoned in him for a testimony and a memorial, even as they were reckoned in the courtyard of the tabernacle of the sanctuary when they slaughtered the bull (or ox) and sang praises, and the blood [was sprinkled] on the sides of the courtyard, and when Aaron and Moses went into the tabernacle to make atonement [fol. 14*b*] for the sins of the people.

[1] Sûtûêl is an appellation of Ezra the Prophet, who edited the Books of the Old Testament, after the Jews had been carried off to Babylon. He is commemorated on the sixth day of February, and on the sixth day of July; see LUDOLF, Commentarius, p. 430, note X.

Blessings be upon thee, O Ḥannâ! All the world shall proclaim thee blessed in return for thy sorrow and tears because thou hadst neither son nor daughter, and thy Son shall be the joy wherewith all the world shall rejoice in thy name. So therefore thou shalt be consoled for Mĕrâsâ, the son of Ṭâlêḳ, who died in the house of Dâyĕḳ — now he was thy father's brother — and at the time of his death, because thou hadst no children, thou didst multiply weeping for him, saying, "Woe is me! Woe "is me! I have neither son nor daughter. He who hath died is thine, O "my Father, and I greatly desire, [O dead one,] that thou shouldst come back to me." Then straightway the dead man spake unto thee, saying, "Why weepest thou for me? For thou shalt [fol. 15*a*] give birth to the "sun". Now that sun is our Lady MARY, the mother of the Sun of Righteousness. All these things have I heard from the angels, and [I have learnt them also] from the ancient Scriptures.

Rejoice thou, O Ḥannâ, for all the world shall rejoice because of thee, and we ourselves rejoice when we hear concerning thee. Thou hast given fruit unto us, that is to say, MARY, who prayeth for life for all the world. This blessed woman Ḥannâ was God-fearing, and she shall be praised in the assembly of the people and in the gates, and the people shall give thanks unto Joachim her husband. She put on strength and beauty, and she rejoiced during the days of her life in the end thereof.

Her mouth did not eat the grain (i. e., bread) of idleness. [fol. 15*b*] She judged according to wisdom, she made manifest the Law, and she established rules for her tongue; and her husband Joachim praised her when she made a coat(?) and a cloak of byssus cloth, and purple for his apparel. And moreover, when he saw in her hand the garments made of good cloth and of fine Canaanitish linen which she gave to the poor and needy, she became to her husband Joachim a crown of honour with which he was well pleased. And she set up seven pillars, and she killed animals and made ready a splendid feast, and the blessed woman Ḥannâ sent out [her] servants, saying [unto those who passed by], "Come ye, "and eat of the bread which I have prepared for you, that is to say, bread "which is not the bread of wickedness that may not be [fol. 16*a*] spoken "of at the time of consecration. Come ye and drink of the wine which I "have poured out for you, that is to say, the wine of joy and gladness, "and not the wine of sugar the taste whereof is bitter in the mouth as "soon as its season is past, for the wine which I give you to drink shall "last for ever, and it shall neither come to an end nor cease from "generation unto generation." This word of prophecy which was uttered by Solomon was fulfilled in Ḥannâ, for Ḥannâ was a good and beautiful woman. And our Lord saith in the Gospel of the Kingdom[1], "A good tree bringeth forth good fruit, and a tree shall be known "by its fruit". And how shall a good tree be distinguished from a bad tree? Of the good tree there is hope, even after it hath become withered and decayed, for if rain fall upon it, [fol. 16*b*] and the winds blow upon it, that tree will clothe itself with bark, and will send forth shoots which will bear fruit from its branches and from the top thereof; and of its branches some will bear fruit thirtyfold, some sixtyfold, and some an hundredfold. And now leave the tree concerning which the voice of this word spake.

[1] See St. Matthew vii. 17, 20.

And again He spake concerning the twelve dry bones, which were the twelve sons of Israel[1], concerning whom Ezekiel prophesied when he saw that they were dry bones. And straightway God said unto Ezekiel[2], "Prophesy over these dry bones". And he prophesied over them, and the spirit of life breathed upon them, and threw skin upon them, until at length they rose up because of [fol. 17*a*] the blessed woman Ḥannâ; and when Ḥannâ put forth a bud from them, life came unto them through her giving birth to MARY, the Lady of us all. A good name is better than the anointing with oil and sweet scents; and one child is better than thousands of children. Now these words did the prophet speak concerning Ḥannâ. Verily she is the best and most lovely of all the created things which are in the heavens or upon the earth, that is to say, our Lady, the blessed MARY, the Pearl of renown. She was in the belly of Adam, who cleansed it from its impurity, in the form of a white pearl, and from him she was given to Seth, and from Seth to Hênôs, and from Hênôs unto Abraham that pearl passed from [fol. 17*b*] body to body, even as saith Solomon the wise man, "It shall pass into the souls of the righteous, and "it shall be sent from the holy ones in the heavens so that it may live "again." And this pearl passed from Abraham unto the royal father, David, and from David to Ḥannâ, being one half dust and the other half white pearl, until, at length, it entered into the womb of Ḥannâ in the appointed season and after long delay. Now from the time when Adam was born from the dust of the earth, although it neither came to an end nor made itself manifest, this pearl did not enter into the womb of any one of the women to whom a name hath been given, howsoever many they may have been, from [the time of] Eve until [the time of] the blessed Ḥannâ. Now the pearl fulfilled its advent into her nine [fol. 18*a*] years after her husband Joachim had taken her to wife, and it did so when she was shedding burning tears and weeping abundantly because she had given birth neither to son nor to daughter. And all the people of Israel thrust her away and said unto her, "Thou art a barren woman, and "thou hast neither offspring nor progeny in Israel which will stand up for "Joachim and his house, and thou wilt bring his house to an end. Get "thee out from among us from this time forth. Thou shalt depart from "our city and shalt not dwell with us; and when it is our duty to offer "up offerings we will have neither lot nor part with thee. For we have "a certain law that those who have no children, whether they be men or "women, shall be driven forth from the house of sacrifice, and be made "to take their stand outside [fol. 18*b*] it and to be separated from their "fellow-worshippers; therefore get thee out from our congregation. What "canst thou do for us, O Ḥannâ? For thy womb is closed, and God "will not open it for thee". In this wise did they speak to her husband Joachim also.

Then Ḥannâ prayed before God, and her soul took refuge with Him, saying, "O Lord God of Israel, Thou God of our fathers Abraham, "and Isaac, and Jacob, Who didst exist before the world and Who shalt "endure for ever and for ever, Whose Name is sweet unto every being, "[fol. 19*a*] to Whom nothing is impossible, Whose existence never had "beginning, and to Whose kingdom there shall never be an end, unto "Whom everything belongeth, and before Whom everything standeth "revealed, Who killest and makest alive, Who shuttest up and makest "to be open, open Thou for me my womb, and give unto me a fair off-"spring which shall be well pleasing unto Thee, and it shall be Thine, and "I will make it an oblation and a pure offering, according to the command "which Thou hast given [us]. Hearken unto my prayer and unto my "petition, even as Thou didst unto the prayer of Ḥannâ, the wife of Elkanah, "the mother of Samuel. If Thou wilt not hearken unto me, and wilt not "give unto me offspring, then destroy me and blot me out, so that I may

"depart unto the everlasting inheritance of my fathers. Of what benefit "is it to me to live upon the earth, if I am [to see] evil days, and be sor- "rowful in spirit, whilst all the [other] daughters [fol. 19*b*] of Israel, who "can bear children and are able to be glad and rejoice in them, point the "finger of scorn at me when they see me and laugh at me? Look, O "Lord, and behold the suffering of Thine handmaiden Ḥannâ who is cast "away and rejected among the daughters of Israel."

And Joachim her husband also spake thus, and keeping his eyes [fixed] upon the ground and his thoughts and mind directed upwards into the heavens, he said, "O my Lord, Thou Lord God of Israel, Who "knowest everything before it cometh to pass, and Who hast good under- "standing of everything before men can declare it unto Thee, why hast "Thou made me a laughing-stock and a derision unto mine enemies? "Look Thou upon my suffering and upon the tribulation of my soul, O "Thou Who hast made the world to come forth out [fol. 20*a*] of nothing, "and hast created the Sun and the Moon without an effort of thought! "Hearken Thou unto my prayer, and incline Thine ear unto my voice, "and lighten the grief of my heart, O Spirit of wisdom and knowledge "which is in Thee, and give me a son of whom I can make an offering "unto Thee, and make me not to be cast away from among all [the "children of] Israel; for Thou art able to take away from him that hath "much, and to give increase unto him that hath a little only." Then after they had finished their prayer, and God had seen Ḥannâ's sorrow, He appeared unto her that day in a vision of the night, in the form of a white bird which came down from heaven; now, the bird had its being in days of old, for it overshadowed the Cherubim of glory [fol. 20*b*]. And there was the hand of a man beneath the wing thereof, and it held in it the cord of life. Now this was the spirit of life, in the form of a white bird, and it took up its abode in the person of Ḥannâ, and became incarnate in her womb, at the time when the pearl went forth from the loins of Joachim, and when, according to the ordinance of carnal union, Ḥannâ received the pearl which was the body (or flesh) of our Lady MARY. Now the white pearl is mentioned because of its purity, and the white bird because her soul [existed] aforetime [with] the Ancient of Days, and it was with Him on the right hand of His Father; thus the white bird and the white pearl are like and equal. And when [fol. 21*a*] it (i. e., the pearl) took up its abode in the womb of Ḥannâ, her womb was moved even like the water of the sea, for it was unaccustomed to this thing. See now how greatly blessed our Lady MARY is, for who hath been born of woman [in this wise]? God Who alone is alone created her; He Who alone is holy alone sanctified her; He Who alone is honourable alone made her honourable; He Who alone is pure alone made her pure.

Who among men is like unto our Lady MARY in her virginity? Among men there is none to be found who is like unto our Lady MARY in her heavenly virginity; none can attain unto the abundant measure of her purity before God and His angels, [fol. 21*b*] and none can become pure in mind and body like unto our Lady MARY. And her soul was with His soul, so that she might cleave closely unto His knowledge. He guarded her and treasured her more than gold and silver, and esteemed her more highly than glorious apparel; and He prepared her, and gave her unto Ḥannâ so that she might be a benefit and an advantage [unto her], even as it is said, "It is better to bring forth no children than to bear "those which are without profit". Blessed be God Who did not give her children when her husband Joachim [first] took her from the house of her father! For if she had given birth unto children speedily, as other women are wont to do, she would then have brought forth children which were without profit. But although it appeared strange in the language of man, God shut up Ḥannâ's womb until His own [good] time, [fol. 22*a*] and He opened Ḥannâ's womb in His own [good] time so that she might give birth unto a good, and noble, and beautiful daughter, ornamented [with virtue] and beloved by all. In the place of her weeping and sorrow Ḥannâ found joy; in the place of her lamentation and cries of grief she found gladness without measure; in the place of her contumely and disgrace she found majesty and honour. Our Lady MARY rejoiced in her Son Jesus Christ our Redeemer, and Ḥannâ rejoiced in her daughter, our Lady MARY, the Mother of our Lord. But forsake, O Ḥannâ, the joy which is in this fleeting world, for it speedily passeth away, for the joy which befitteth thee is in heaven, and it never cometh to an end. Now Eve brought forth many [children], thirty male children, and [fol. 22*b*] thirty female children, but of what advantage were they unto her? For she found no happiness, and there was nothing for her except suffering, and sickness, and the breaking of bones. And she was obliged to wait for thy coming, and she bowed down before thee when she found resurrection in the Son of thy daughter. O blessed Ḥannâ, who can praise thee overmuch? For of all the women who were before thee and who have been after thee Grace alighted upon none save thee. Now Bârkâ, the wife of Yârêd, who gave birth to Enoch, did not find happiness and did not escape death, for her bones were scattered abroad in Sheol; but Enoch did escape death by mounting while still alive upon a whirlwind and passing to the place of life where he liveth until this present. And why [fol. 23*a*] should she give birth to one who performed not an act of graciousness to her? For he dwelleth in the place of joy which abideth for ever, whilst she is crying out and groaning in a place of misery until this day.

Now when Ḥannâ had given birth to a daughter she was not able to see death a second time, for her flesh was the flesh of the Deity. O Ḥannâ, thou art greater than Ḥaykal, who gave birth to Noah, who was saved from the waters of the flood, and who alone left behind him a plant of righteousness which shall endure for ever. And thou art very much more honourable than Ednâ, the mother of Abraham, who received the seal of circumcision, and God established a covenant between Himself and his seed for ever. O Ḥannâ, the blessed women Sarah and Rebecca together could not form the price of one of the nails of thy feet, for [fol. 23*b*] thou art the mother of life, and that life was MARY, in whom the heavens and the earth rejoice, and in whom God became incarnate. The persecution which thou didst suffer was as great as are the heavens, O thou blessed woman Ḥannâ, and it covered thee even as a cloud covereth the face of the earth. And thou didst find the joy which was boundless, and which was as great as the persecution which thou didst endure because of thy daughter MARY, our mother. It is customary for the word of God to be hard [to understand], and for His handiwork to be marvellous; and He first of all maketh a trial of man. As a man trieth gold in the fire, even so doth God try His chosen ones by suffering and by misery. Now Ḥannâ was born in sin, and in sin [she ate her] food, and God tried her first of all so that she might [at length] remove oppression from [fol. 24*a*] all the tribes of Israel; He knew the patience of her mind in abundant sorrow and suffering, and He gave unto her a beautiful and two-fold reward which no man can take away from her. Even as the prophets said, "Through much labour and suffering we must enter into the king-"dom of heaven".[1] And this prophecy is fulfilled in Ḥannâ, for she endured patiently all her burden and all the heat of the day; and because of this she inherited the kingdom of heaven. Now the kingdom of heaven of which I speak is the Son of Ḥannâ's daughter [MARY], that is to say, our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, for many have desired to receive the majesty and honour of Ḥannâ by calling their daughters ['MARY'], even as Jochebed called her first daughter by that name [fol. 24*b*], and he [the Law] calleth her 'Miriam', (i. e., MARY), which was unsuitable for her. And for this reason she fell sick and the scab of leprosy took hold upon her, and she went forth outside the camp[1]; for in the Law it is said that she was seized with leprosy in the passage wherein it blameth Moses. Now I say that when God wished to destroy Miriam because of His jealousy for His mother, He sought out those means of doing it, and He did not wish her to be called by the name of His mother. And many of those who have been called by the name of MARY, the daughter of Ḥannâ, have not found life, for some of them have become possessed of devils and some have been taken in adultery, all which things have happened through jealousy for God's mother. Therefore, from the earliest times, God hath neither caused nor wished that other women should be [fol. 25*a*] called by the name of His mother.

Hearken now unto Moses, who when he spake concerning jealousy for a name[2] said unto the house of Israel, "God shall take for you from "among your brethren [one] who shall be like unto me, and He shall "call his name Lord". And by that same prophet who magnified His command was this spirit rooted out from among the people. For when a certain Egyptian woman[3] of the tribe of Dan heard this, she gave birth to a son and called his name 'Lord'[4]. Now when the children of Israel heard thereof, they murmured against her, and they brought the young man unto Moses, and he put him into prison. And Moses went to enquire [concerning him] before God, and he took his [fol. 25*b*] shoes from off his feet, and said, "Wilt Thou send this young man, whose name is "'Lord' to be a prophet in my days? Or wilt Thou send another? I "enquire of Thee concerning the blaspheming of Thy name; tell me what "I shall do with this young man, and whether I shall set him before Thee."

[2] I. e., blasphemy.

[3] I. e., Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan; see the whole passage in Leviticus xxiv. 10—23.

[4] Our author adopts the Ethiopic version of the story.

And straightway God answered, and said unto Moses, "Am not I He? "But Satan shall lie in wait for Dan from his roots even unto his branches "Iscariot. Whosoever curseth the Name of God shall surely die, and they "shall curse him with stones." And when all the companies of Israel had gathered themselves together they stoned that young man with stones outside the camp, and he died an evil death. And I say likewise that whosoever curseth the Name of the [fol. 26*a*] Virgin MARY, the blessed woman, the daughter of Ḥannâ and Joachim, the mother of Emmanuel our God, shall die the death, and his soul and his body shall die, and he shall not find happiness for ever and ever! Amen.

[TO BE SAID ON THE] THIRD DAY OF THE WEEK.

Therefore, come ye and let us ascribe praise unto Ḥannâ, for God hath ascribed praise unto her, and in His praise of her He took up His abode in the womb of her daughter. Come ye and let us magnify Ḥannâ, for God hath magnified her, for she is His Mother according to the flesh. Ḥannâ is to be more highly esteemed than gold and silver, and she is better by far than the twelve precious stones[1], whether taken one by one or all together; she is more beautiful than the Sun, and Moon, and all created beings and things which are in the heavens and on the earth. There is no [woman] that can be compared with her for beauty, and grace, and majesty, [fol. 26*b*] and honour, although she is inferior to our Lady MARY, and she is more honourable than all other women because she gave birth to the Virgin MARY. Her odour is more fragrant than that of every kind of flower, yea, sweeter than that of sweet-smelling plants and galbanum, and the odour of cinnamon oil and cassia cannot be compared unto her sweet smell. Inasmuch as she was pure her odour was the sweeter when the blessed MARY was in her womb, and in sweetness nothing could be like unto her odour and smell. She had no desire to adorn herself after the manner of [other] women, for she said in her heart and with her tongue, "My adornment and my joy, both in my life and in my death, "for my soul and for my body, is my Lady, the blessed MARY, and she "is the anointing of my face; I have no desire [fol. 27*a*] to anoint myself "after the manner of other women, for my anointing is the blessed MARY." And straightway she rejoiced in her heart, and said, "Henceforth I will "rejoice and be glad, for my weeping hath departed from me; and all "mine enemies shall be confounded and put to shame. O ye daughters "of Israel, come ye and hearken unto my voice, and behold ye me with "my child on my shoulders sucking milk from my breasts! Behold, I am "the woman whom in times past ye did drive forth from your houses "because of your contempt for me, and ye lifted up your voices against "me. Look ye and see that my daughter is more excellent than your "daughters. The heavens, and the earth, and all the creations of men and "angels, are not sufficient to pay the price of one hair of the head [fol. "27*b*] of my daughter." After this manner did Ḥannâ speak.

[1] The allusion seems to be to the twelve precious stones — a sardius, a topaz, a carbuncle, an emerald, a sapphire, a diamond, a ligure, an agate, an amethyst, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper — which were arranged in four rows in the "breast plate of judgment". See Exodus xxviii. 16—21.

And again Ḥannâ said, "Let everything which belongeth unto me "rejoice, for God hath opened my womb, and my husband Joachim who "in time past hated me, now loveth me. Whenever I saw him he would "speak words of mockery unto me, saying, 'I have good reason to rejoice', "and I used to sit down, and my limbs melted like wax; and when he "held his peace I was sorrowful, and my heart suffered pain. But from this "time onwards whether he laugh at me, or whether he hold his peace, "my mind shall not cease from rejoicing, and I shall not suffer sorrow "through him, because I have a daughter who shall be adorned with "praise. Come, O all ye peoples of the earth, and call my daughter "blessed! And offer ye salutations unto her, [fol. 28*a*] for God hath given "her unto me. Who among all women hath given birth unto a child as "I have done? The Prophets prophesied concerning me and my daughter, "and my father Aaron, the son of Levi, shall be praised through my "daughter for ever and ever, and his priesthood shall never be done "away. What doth it profit you to give birth unto sons and daughters? "For the kings and royal people who shall be begotten by you shall do "no manner of good for you, and although they roar like lions they shall "neither save themselves, nor have the power to save others, and the "tigers which rend and tear cattle and sheep shall become a vain thing "and shall nevermore appear to the sight; but the Son of my daughter "hath become life unto Abraham and his seed for ever. Concerning my "daughter MARY the prophet [fol. 28*b*] spake, saying, 'The barren "'woman hath brought forth seven children, and she who is the mother "'of children is unable to bring forth [again].'"[1]

Now the barren woman of whom he spake is Ḥannâ, who gave birth to one daughter instead of seven sons; and through her first bringing forth she shall judge and bring into subjection those who shall be born in seven thousand years. They shall wait for her coming, and afterwards they shall rejoice because of her, saying, "Come ye, let us rejoice "and be glad in her. Come ye, let us give praise and sing psalms unto "her"; now this woman is the prophetess Ḥannâ. She was the daughter of the prophets, and her own daughter [MARY] prophesied and said, "Behold from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed, for He "that is mighty hath done great things for me, and holy is His Name. "He hath magnified those who are of no account, and He hath filled [fol. 29*a*] the hungry with His blessing."[2] Now Ḥannâ was hungry and had been brought exceedingly low in the house of Israel, and afterwards she became filled, and being satisfied she was moved to tenderness; but she had no wish either to eat or to drink like the people of [this] world when she had given birth for us to MARY, the door of joy and gladness. And she said, "The prophecy of David my father hath been fulfilled in "me; but I am filled (or satisfied) with the sight of the glory of God".

Now the body (or flesh) of MARY and the glorious adoption [thereof] by God can be interpreted in two ways, that is to say, either as adoption, or as a reward; and His Trinity is to be interpreted as a hidden thing. And again the Prophet saith, "Who maketh the barren woman "to dwell in His house, and Who maketh to rejoice the mother of "children."[1] Verily Ḥannâ [fol. 29*b*] kept house and God tried her mind in every way possible in this world, until at length He gave her the power to bring forth for Him His Mother MARY; and Ḥannâ rejoiced exceedingly in embracing her daughter, and in suckling her at her breasts. And because of this thing when the [children of] Israel heard that Christ was born of the daughter of Ḥannâ, they rose up against Ḥannâ in wrath, and spake unto her with words of contempt, saying, "Is it true that thou "sayest, 'My daughter hath given birth to God?' Wouldst thou call her "the 'Mother of God?' Wouldst thou that all the people of the world "should bow down at thy feet? Why thinkest thou in this wise, and why "dost thou utter falsehood with thy tongue? Put away this thought from "thine heart, for thou art a woman of poor estate, and thou hast neither "[fol. 30*a*] goods, nor possessions, nor clean raiment, and thou imaginest "this thing only from thine exceeding boldness." This was the beginning of the wickedness of the Jews.

Then did the blessed Ḥannâ say unto the elders of Israel, "Come "ye and hearken unto me with [your] hearts. Is there anything too exalted "for God [to do]? Do not the Scriptures say that when David offered up "his offerings unto God with a sincere spirit, and with a lowly and innocent "heart that God did not reject them? And by the mouth of Elijah the [1] Psalm cxiii. 9.

"prophet God spake, and said, 'Unto whom shall I look except to him
"'that is sincere and lowly, who hearkeneth unto My voice, and who "'doeth My commandments? Upon such shall My spirit rest, for I am "'lowly and humble in heart.' God desireth [fol. 30*b*] not the rich man, "neither seeketh He anything from the great, but He looketh unto those "who are humble, and for this reason His compassion shall not be remote "from me." Now this is the woman whom the Prophets have named 'compassionate'. "Have ye never heard aforetime what they spake con"cerning my daughter, and how even a dead man spake before you and "said that she should be born even before I had conceived her? And "shall I restrain you? Why are ye envious of me because of what God "hath now given unto me because He closed my womb? And He said "unto me, 'I give thee this daughter instead of thousands of children', and "He is my hope. What have ye against me, seeing that I have not com"mitted an offence against you? For [fol. 31*a*] I have done unto you no "injury like unto that which ye have done unto me. When I was living "shut up in my house during the period wherein my womb was closed
"ye hated me, and ye thrust me away utterly from you; and now that "God hath opened for me my womb, and I have given birth unto a "daughter ye still reject me. O men of Israel, how long will ye reject me?
"How long must I bear with you? And how long must I flee from before "your face? Is not my flesh your flesh? Are not my bones your bones?
"Why do ye treat me as if I had not been born of your people? My tears "shall come back upon you, and your daughters shall be stricken with "sorrow, and your wives shall not rejoice, for your wombs shall be shut "up, and they shall not be able to bring forth children. They shall never "give birth [fol. 31*b*] to vigorous sons who shall be helpful unto the city and "country, and no wise and understanding king shall go forth from among "you. Are there none among you who will shew mercy? Why treat ye "me in this wise? And why do ye heap insult upon my daughter, seeing "that she shall conceive and bring forth the Christ? How great is the "oppression with which ye oppress my daughter! And how greatly "do ye disgrace her! I could wish that my soul had gone forth [from "my body] before I had seen the sorrow, and the weeping, and the cry "of lamentation in the highway and in the desert, and all the persecution "which shall come [upon her]."

Then all the companies of Israel said, "Wherefore doth this woman "abuse us? In times past she was a barren woman, but now that she "hath gotten a daughter she doth magnify herself over us, [fol. 32a] and "doth say, 'My daughter shall become the mother of the heavenly King'. "Come now, let us weave a plot against her, and let us make a firm "compact to stone both her and her daughter with stones, so that the "report of these things may not wax great after her [death]." But one half of the people said, "What have we to do with this woman? If this report be true we shall know it". And all Israel rose up and departed unto their houses. Then Ḥannâ went into her house praising God, and giving thanks unto Him because she had found grace and favour which could not be brought into judgment by other women. No women are to be praised like unto her for noble deeds and gracious goodness except Judith and Esther, who [fol. 32*b*] through zeal for their houses vanquished strong men; the one slew Holophernes[1], and the other slew Haman by hanging upon the gallows.[2] Now these women are not to be praised like unto Ḥannâ, but only in their proper measure, for each of them rose in her appointed time, and they only came into being when Israel was without a kingdom and without a judge. For if it were otherwise why, when they tell the story and declare the generations of the patriarchs from Adam and Eve until Joachim and Ḥannâ, do they place their names at the beginning of the Scriptures for a testimony? And the prophet said, Hannâ nursing her child the Blessed Virgin Mary. On her right stands Michael, and on her left Gabriel. At her feet Abbâ Gabra Mâryâm lies prostrate.

"The stone which the builders rejected hath become the head of the "corner of the house"[3]; and Ḥannâ, the honourable ones and the shepherds having rejected her, hath become the corner stone [fol. 33*a*] of the house. Now the house of which I speak is our Lady MARY, who was the house of God and the habitation of the Most High. For she became a mediator between the heavens and the earth, and through her all the world became united in peace, and she slew hatred and whatsoever was hateful was destroyed, and she wrought peace for those who were afar off, and salvation for those who were near.

But let us return to the beginning of the matter. Now whilst Ḥannâ was in her house she meditated in her heart, and said, concerning her daughter, 'What can I do for this my daughter?' For if that which "hath been said be true, and if God shall take up His abode in her womb, "where shall I put her [so that she may avoid] the envy of all the people "of [fol. 33*b*] Israel? When they hear the sound of the report of her Son, "my Lord Jesus Christ, [they will call Him] a righteous man [only], but "her they will persecute and drive from city to city, and as for her Son "they will crucify Him and slay Him outside Jerusalem. What shall I do "for my daughter? For she is my only [child], and she hath neither "brother nor sister. It grieveth me sorely, and I suffer pain on her account "when I think that she shall be held up to disgrace by Israel; never-"theless, afterwards there shall blossom the peace of compassion and "righteousness for all the peoples of the earth. And those who shall hate "her shall become hateful creatures unto angels and men, and moreover "wild beasts shall consume them, and only Sheol shall rejoice [fol. 34*a*] "when it findeth that they have become its food. But those who love my "daughter, and shall pay honour unto her, shall become beloved and "shall be held in honour by every one, and by her Son, our Lord Jesus "Christ. O Lord God of Israel, judge Thou my cause, and deliver me, "and for Thy word's sake make me to live; but let my life be remote "from sinners. Thy compassion is exceedingly abundant, O make Thou "me to live according to Thy judgment. Those who persecute me and "inflict pain upon me are many, but I have never withdrawn myself from "Thy testimony; O God, deliver Thou my soul. God is Merciful and "Righteous, and our Lord is Compassionate. Thou, O God, art the "guardian of children, O keep Thou in safety my child, my [fol. 34*b*] "daughter, and I will give her unto Thee as a pledge. Be Thou her "defender, and do Thou be unto her a helper for ever and ever. And "as for me, my soul desireth to go forth [from my body] rather than to "look upon the tears and the sorrow of mine only daughter. What can "I do for her? Thou knowest how feeble I am and how my strength "hath become worn out. O God, receive my soul and destroy me, so that "I may depart unto my everlasting fathers."

And it came to pass that when Ḥannâ had made an end of this her prayer, pain laid hold upon her, and she became ill for a short space of time; and then she went to her rest and departed this life on the eleventh day of the month Ḥadâr[1], which is Tâsrîn[2], the second month of the Hebrews, and the November of the Romans, at the sixth [hour of the day]. And they buried [fol. 35*a*] her in the grave of her fathers, according to the law of the children of Aaron, with Mâtât, her father. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Gabra Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

[TO BE SAID ON THE] FOURTH DAY OF THE WEEK.

Now all these things concerning the death of Ḥannâ took place whilst our Lady MARY was in the sanctuary. And they told her that Ḥannâ her mother had died, and when our Lady MARY heard it, she wept and said, "Woe is me! Woe is me! My mother hath left me a sorrow-"ful woman. Woe is me! Woe is me! O mother, who will be unto me "like thee? Unto whom hast [thou] left me? Woe is me! O my mother! "O daughters of Israel, come ye and weep for me and cast ye me not away; "for I am an only daughter, [fol. 35*b*] and I have none [to take her place]. "Come, O Jeremiah, and make a lamentation for my mother Ḥannâ, for she "hath forsaken me, and I am alone in the house of brass. Who will pour "water upon my hands?[1] And the tears start into mine eyes." Now whilst our Lady MARY was weeping in this wise she remained by herself in the house of the sanctuary, and there was none to give her consolation. And it came to pass that twelve years after she had left her mother's breast, Gabriel came and said unto her, "Rejoice, O thou that art full "of grace, God is with thee. And behold, thou shalt conceive and bring "forth a Son, and thou shalt call His Name Jesus; He shall be great, and He shall be called the Son of God Most High." Then our Lady MARY said unto [fol. 36*a*] Gabriel, "Let it be unto me even as thou sayest"; and the angel departed from her. Then straightway our Lady MARY said unto him, "Can it be true what my mother Ḥannâ spake unto me? For "she said unto me, 'The Son of God shall be born of thee'".

Now God made her a handmaiden unto Him. Verily the Holy Spirit spake by the mouth of Rebecca when she said, 'The elder shall 'serve the younger'.[2] And through Him Ḥannâ became great and exceedingly honourable beyond all gainsaying, for she became blessed above all women, and whosoever believeth on her shall be blessed. Blessed is he that shall celebrate her commemoration with incense and with offering[s]! Blessed is he that shall give a loaf of bread or a cup [of water] for the sake of the holy woman Ḥannâ! And he shall receive [them in return] a hundredfold [fol. 36*b*], together with salvation of body in this world, and in the world which is to come a fair reward and the life which never passeth away. And her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, saith[1], "Whosoever "receiveth a prophet shall receive the reward of a prophet; and whosoever "receiveth a righteous man shall receive the reward of a righteous man "and the wages of a righteous man; and whosoever shall give one of these "little ones a cup of cold water [to drink] in My Name, or in the name "of a disciple of Mine, shall not lose his reward." For this reason I, the poor and miserable one, say, Celebrate ye the commemoration of the blessed Ḥannâ as far as [it lieth] in your power, and forget not her memorial. Pray ye unto her with ready hearts, and she will pray for you unto God, the Son of her [fol. 37*a*] daughter, our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye may find forgiveness of your sins. And celebrate ye, from the bottom of your heart, the commemoration of Ḥannâ with greater zeal, and glory, and honour, than the commemorations of all the companies of those who have the pre-eminence and rejoice, and than the commemorations of the martyrs and righteous men who have endured with patience and quietness a cruel death for the sake of her daughter's Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, and who dwell in righteousness. Can ye pay honour unto the Son without paying honour unto the Father? Can ye pay honour unto the daughter without paying honour unto the mother? Honour ye then the mother, even as ye honour her daughter, and celebrate a festival in her honour. And neglect ye not her a second time, even as the children of Israel neglected her because she had not gotten a child, [fol. 37*b*] for her oppression was remembered before God because of those who had neglected her. Now all those who neglected and oppressed the blessed woman Ḥannâ shall weep when they see her in honour and in majesty, standing at the right hand of her blessed daughter. And I, the poor and miserable one, who am unworthy to call myself a priest, before you say that when a brother is made to be a partaker in the love of Ḥannâ, his existence is more beautiful than that of all those who are called. And the Holy Spirit hath proclaimed concerning me that I shall be a witness on behalf of Ḥannâ, the wife of Joachim, and the mother of the mother of our Lord Jesus Christ. God be with you, O ye my fathers and brethren who have gathered yourselves together here to celebrate the commemoration of the blessed Ḥannâ [fol. 38*a*] for ever and ever. Amen.

Amen. And praise, and words of salutation and homage, be unto Ḥannâ, the mother of the mother of Adônây[1], who made to rise a second Sun. May the great might of her prayers keep us and all the children of the Church from all evil for ever and ever! Amen.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, O my Lady Ḥannâ, thou [fol. 38*b*] bride of the heavenly Father, thou habitation of the mother of the Son Who hath the pre-eminence, thou ark of the vivifying Holy Spirit.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, O my Lady Ḥannâ, thou saviour of Adam the sorrowful one, thou foundation of the offering of Abel who was slain.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, thou Queen of all women.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, O my Lady Ḥannâ, thou goddess of Sârâ and Kêtûrâ.[2]

[2] See Genesis xxv. 1.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, O my Lady Ḥannâ, thou life of the happiness of Rebḳâ (Rebecca), and Sârâ, and Rachel, and Leah.

WORDS OF JOY be unto thee, O my Lady Ḥannâ, thou majesty of the Seraphim when they cry out(?), thou who art the burnt offerings at the offering up of the sacrifice, thou who art the wings of the Cherubim at the spreading out thereof, thou prophecy of the prophets [fol. 39*a*] when light burst forth, thou preaching of the Apostles at the time of morning. O my lady Ḥannâ, at the majesty of thy sovereignty there is exultation [among] our mothers Mêlkâ[1], and Têrsâ[2], and Ḥêglâ[3], and Nûḥâ[4], and Mahalâ[5], the five children of Salapad.[6] On the day wherein died the righteous woman Ḥannâ, the mother of our Lady MARY, who gave birth to our Lord, the Word of the Living God, honour and purity were ascribed unto her by the glorious beings as unto the ancient fathers.

Now this righteous woman [came] from the city of Jerusalem, and she was the daughter of Mâṭâṭ, the son of Levi, the son of Mêlkâ, of the tribe of Levi. Now Mâṭâṭ had three daughters. The name of the eldest was Mary, the second [was called] Sophia, [fol. 39*b*] and the third Ḥannâ, Mary married and gave birth to Salômê, and she it was who became the helper of our Lady MARY when she brought forth our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And Sophia married, and gave birth to Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist; and the holy woman Ḥannâ married Joachim, who was of the tribe of Judah, and gave birth to our Lady MARY. Now Elizabeth, and Salômê, and Ḥannâ were the daughters of one wife, but the holy woman Ḥannâ became more honourable than all the [other] women of the world, and at length she was worthy to give birth to the mother of God in the flesh, and that her righteousness [fol. 40*a*] and honour are greater than [those of] all [other] women is well known.

Now Ḥannâ was a barren woman, and because of her exceedingly great strenuousness in fasting, and in prayer, and in making supplication unto God, He gave her this daughter [MARY]; and having seen her sorrow and her weeping God made her to rejoice, and in her all the sons of the children of men rejoiced also. For this reason it is meet for us to magnify her, and henceforth we must not revile Ḥannâ as did Reuben[1], who said unto Ḥannâ and Joachim, "It is not right for you to offer up your offerings "before the Lord your God, because ye have no seed according to the "commandment of the Law". O how these words [fol. 40*b*] would break the bones, and make the heart to burn, and set the bowels on fire! And when Joachim heard [them] he was exceedingly sorrowful, and he began to pray, saying, "O my Lord, and God, and King, behold all the children "of Israel have seed and offspring, but I have none". Then he thought of the righteous, and of the chosen men, and how they all had children and offspring; and how God remembered Abraham when he was an hundred years old, and how he begot a son in his old age and called him Isaac, and again the blessed Joachim remembered many of the fathers, and Manoah, [the father of Samson], and Ḥannâ, the wife of Elkanah. And he did not tell this sorrow unto his wife, nor how Reuben had reviled him and had spoken words of insult unto him [fol. 41*a*]. Then he withdrew into the desert and went afar off, and he fasted forty days and forty nights, and made supplication unto the Lord his God, saying, "No food "shall enter into my mouth until God shall look upon my sorrow and my "weeping, and shall hear my petition. My prayer shall be my food, and "the tears which go forth from mine eyes shall be my prayer." And his wife Ḥannâ began to weep and lament, and her bosom heaved with sobs,

And it came to pass that when the festival of the Jews had come, [fol. 40*b*] a certain woman from among her neighbours came and said unto Ḥannâ, "How long wilt thou continue to be sorrowful, without eating, "and without drinking, and without sleeping? How long wilt thou punish "thyself with this severe grief? Since thou hast declared it [unto God] "let Him make thee to forget it. Behold, the appointed festival hath come, "the day wherein six hundred thousand of [the children of] Israel went "out from Egypt on foot; rejoice thou, therefore, together with those "women who are like unto thee, and who also rejoice. And behold, I "have brought rich apparel unto thee, take it, and put it on, and adorn "thyself therewith, for thou art of a noble family, and it is meet that thou "shouldst array thyself in this glorious apparel." Then Ḥannâ answered and said unto her, "O my sister, leave me to weep [fol. 41*a*] over my "misery until God shall look upon my sorrow, for unto me shall be sorrow, "and grief, and bitter tears; and I will [not] put off my garb of mourning "until the day of my death. I will not array myself [in fine apparel] like "a woman who is joyful of heart. Unto what am I to be likened? Is it "not a tree which hath neither leaves nor fruit? Am I not like one who "hath been killed and destroyed in the city? I am sad of soul, and "sorrowful of heart, and I will not put on this apparel concerning which "I know not whence it hath come. It may have been stolen, or it may "be the hire of fornication, concerning which God gave a law unto Moses, "and said unto him, Speak unto the children of Israel [saying], 'Go not "'unto the wicked woman, [fol. 41*b*] and commit not fornication', et cetera. "I will not put on [this apparel], for it may be of the hire of the fornicators." Then the woman answered her with wrath and anger, and, with her heart burning like fire, said unto Ḥannâ, "In that God shut up thy womb, "and did withhold from thee the fruit of blessing, and did not give unto "thee children like all the daughters of Israel, He did well, and verily "He did rightly. I was wishing to do good unto thee, and thou didst "reward me with abuse, and didst bring upon me words of reviling." And when the blessed woman heard these words she was sorrowful with a great sorrow.

Then Ḥannâ rose up quickly, and put off her wretched apparel, and she washed herself, and beautified herself [fol. 42*a*], and adorned herself; then she put on fine apparel, and went into the house of the sanctuary of God Almighty to pray. And as she was going along the road she saw a high tree wherein were certain birds with their young ones, and Ḥannâ said, "God hath blessed them, and hath multiplied them "exceedingly. Hearken Thou unto the prayer of me, Thine handmaiden, "and grant unto me the petition of my lips, and bless me, O Thou Who "didst bless the womb of Sarah, and didst give unto her a child in her "old age." And Ḥannâ lifted up her eyes to heaven, and she began to weep and to say unto God, "Woe is me! Woe is me! Unto what can "I be compared? [fol. 42*b*] Can I be likened unto a bird? [Nay, for] "the birds have young ones. Woe then is me! Unto what can I be "compared? Can [I be likened] unto the beasts of the field and forest? "[Nay, for] they also have young ones." And whilst she was weeping and lamenting in this wise, and was looking up unto heaven, behold, the angel of God came down from heaven to the place where she was in the house of the sanctuary. Then he stood up before her, and said unto her, "Behold, God hath heard thy petition, and hath received thy prayer, "and behold, thou shalt conceive, and shalt bear a child". And the blessed Ḥannâ said unto Gabriel, who was the teller of joyful news and the bearer of the glad tidings, "O my Lord and God, if I get either a son or a "daughter, I will give the child to be a servant unto God, and I will "dedicate him unto the house of His sanctuary, and he shall not depart "therefrom all the days of his life." Then the angel, who was one of the seven archangels, said unto her, "Behold, Joachim thy husband hath come "from the desert; tell him what I have said unto thee. And let him take "a kid of the goats and a young lamb, and carry them into the tabernacle, "and offer them up as offerings unto God." And the angel departed also unto Joachim, and said unto him, "Hail to thee! Behold, God hath "heard thy petition, and hath received thy offering. Thy wife Ḥannâ "shall conceive, and shall bear unto thee a lovely and beautiful daughter, "whose Son shall rule over the house of Jacob for ever, [fol. 43*b*] and "His kingdom shall have no end." Now when Joachim had heard him, he rejoiced and gave thanks unto God, and said, "Blessed be the Lord "God of Israel, Who hath not rejected my petition and hath received my "prayer, even as it saith in the Psalm[1], 'Blessed is the man unto whom "'God hath not imputed his iniquity'". Verily not untrue is the word of "the prophet who said, God is nigh unto those that are meek of heart, "and He helpeth those who are lowly in spirit."[2]

Then Joachim cried out unto the shepherds of his sheep and herds, and said unto them, "Bring me two[3] sheep as an offering for God"; and they brought unto him oxen [fol. 44*a*] and sheep, and he made an offering unto God; then he came into his house and made a feast for the poor and needy and for all his kinsfolk. And on the third day the noble Joachim meditated in his heart, and said, "If it indeed be true what the "angel hath said in the vision I will again offer up offerings unto God, a "ram without spot and a calf without blemish, and I will bring them [unto "the tabernacle] that they shall offer them up, and then I shall see my "face in the crown of the house of the sanctuary." Now there was a crown made of precious stones and [mother-of-] pearl which was set in the altar, and when one of the children of Israel brought [fol. 44*b*] offerings, whether according to obligation, or freewill, or whether because sin had appeared in him, and offered them up, if God accepted his offerings from him, the face of him that had brought the offering used to appear in the crown of mother-of-pearl as in a mirror[1]. And if God had not accepted his offerings his face did not appear in the crown which was made of mother-of-pearl. Then straightway the blessed Joachim took sheep and oxen and offered [them] up before God, saying, "If Thou art pleased, O "God, with the offering which I have offered up upon Thine altar, let Thy "face appear in the crown of mother-of-pearl." And he saw forthwith His face in [fol. 45*a*] the crown, and the blessed Joachim said, "Behold, I know "that God hath had mercy on me and hath received me, and that the "vision which He shewed me is true." Then Joachim returned unto his house, and with joy and gladness he praised God, unto Whom glory and praise are meet for ever and ever. Amen.

[TO BE SAID ON] THE FIFTH DAY.

We will now make known [unto you] the statement of the prophets who are witnesses that God said unto our father Adam, "I Myself shall "come in five days and half a day, and I shall be born of thy daughter; "then I will have mercy upon thee and shew compassion unto thee with "the abundance of My mercy[2]." He made the five thousand years to be

[1] This legend seems to be peculiar to the Ethiopic, and to be due to a misunderstanding of the Greek, which reads:— Τῇ δὲ ἐπαύριον προσέφερε τὰ δῶρα αὐτοῦ λέγων ἐν ἑαυτῷ· ἐὰν κύριος ὁ θεὸς ἱλασθῇ μοι, τὸ πέταλον τοῦ ἱερέως φανερόν μοι ποιήσει. καὶ προσέφερεν τὰ δῶρα αὐτοῦ Ἰωακεὶμ καὶ προσείχεν τῷ πετάλῳ τοῦ ἱερέως ὡς ἐπέβη ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον κυρίου, καὶ οὐκ εἶδεν ἁμαρτίαν ἐν ἑαυτῷ. TISCHENDORF, Protevangelium Jacobi, p. 11.

[2] The explanation of this passage is found in the Book of Adam and Eve (Malan's translation), Chapter ii. 1 ff. "God said to Adam, I have ordained on this earth days and years, and thou and thy "seed shall dwell and walk in it until the days and years are fulfilled; when I shall send the Word that "created thee, and against which thou hast transgressed, the Word that made thee come out of the "garden, and that raised thee when thou wast fallen. Yea, the Word that will again save thee when "the five days and a half are fulfilled! But when Adam heard these words from God, and [of] the great "five days and a half, he did not understand the meaning of them. For Adam was thinking that there "would be but five days and a half for him, to the end of the world. And Adam wept, and prayed as five days, and He made the five hundred years to be as six hours of a day. And [fol. 45*b*] moreover, our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ saith in the Book of the Covenant, "In one hundred and fifty years, at the "end thereof, at Pentecost and Easter, the coming of My Father shall "take place;" that is to say, He [considered] one hundred to be as one thousand, and five hundred as five. And Îsâyayâs (Isaiah?) said, "He "shall dwell in the world five hundred and forty-five days." Behold, we have established [our] testimony from the Holy Scriptures, both Old and New, as concerning the coming of our Lord unto the Lady Ḥannâ. Now when the holy woman Ḥannâ had conceived, she dwelt and gave thanks unto God for nine months; and it came to pass that when nine months [had passed over] her, she gave birth to a daughter. Then Ḥannâ said unto the midwife, "To what have I given birth"? [fol. 46*a*] and the midwife said unto her, "Thou hast given birth unto a daughter". And Ḥannâ said, "My soul doth magnify God"; and she called the name of the child "MARY". And when forty days had passed, Ḥannâ purified herself, and put on her apparel, and suckled the child. Now she was the "only" child of her mother; the Book calleth MARY, the "only" child just as aforetime it called Ḥannâ, her mother, the "only" child. And it came to pass that when six months were ended to our Lady MARY, she walked five steps[1] on her feet, and then she returned unto her mother's bosom. Then Ḥannâ said, "As God Almighty liveth I will not let this "child walk about [fol. 46*b*] on the ground until I have taken her into the "house of the sanctuary of God". And she built a habitation (or chamber) for MARY, to live in alone, and she made her to dwell therein until she was one year old.

"God to explain it to him. Then God in His mercy for Adam [who was made after] His own image "and similitude, explained to him, that those were five thousand and five hundred years; and how One "would then come and save him and his seed." See TRUMPP, Der Kampf Adams, p. 5.

Then did Joachim make a great feast in honour of MARY, and he invited the priests, and the princes of Israel, and their nobles, and the elders of the people, and he made ready a feast and filled them all. And her father brought MARY unto the priests, and they all blessed her, saying, "May God our God, Who hath the dominion over all things, the God "of our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, bless this child, and grant "unto her fair offspring [fol. 47*a*] which shall set us free from destruction; "and may He grant unto her power and strength, and may He magnify "her for ever and ever! Amen." And all the people said, "Amen, and "Amen". Then Joachim took her unto all the chief priests and elders of the people, and they all blessed her, each one according to his rank and birth, and said unto her, "May God, Who sustaineth the worlds, the "God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, Who "dwelleth in the heights, bless her outwardly and inwardly, both her soul "and her body." And when they had blessed her in this wise, her mother took her and brought her into the habitation which she had built for her. Then Ḥannâ said, "I praise God Almighty with the praises of "the saints, I bless Him, I laud Him, I proclaim Him holy, I give thanks "unto Him, I exalt Him, I magnify Him, I love Him, and I offer gratitude "unto Him, because He hath removed the word of reproach and the "word of shame in the matter of me from the nation of Israel; for they "said unto me, 'We will not receive thine offering and oblation because "'thou hast neither seed nor offspring of blessing'. Therefore I sat down "forty days and forty nights and ate nothing whatsoever, and I cast away "care for my apparel. And my heart was full of grief and sorrow, and "I took no pleasure in my life. All these things came upon me through "the people of my nation, at the hands of themselves and their women, "yea, even at the hands of [mine own] maidservants and menservants, "[fol. 48*a*] who reviled me; and my meat and my drink became bitter "unto me. And my brother, and my sister, and my father, and my mother,

"and my kinsfolk persecuted me, and reproached me and offered me no "comfort. The tribe of Reuben, with its various peoples and women, "according to their families (literally houses), and all the tribes of Israel, "even unto the tribe of Benjamin, and each and every one of their women "on her own behalf reviled me without ceasing, and they stood up together "and heaped insults upon me. Praise be unto God Adônây.[1] Praise be "unto God Ṣabâʿôt[2]. Praise be unto God Êlôhê.[3] O praise God in His "holiness. Praise Him in the strength of His might. Praise Him [fol. 48*b*] "in His power. Praise Him according to the abundance of His greatness. "Praise Him with the sound of the horn. Praise Him with the singing of "psalms and the harp. Praise Him with the drum and with joy. Praise "Him with the strings and pipes. Praise Him with cymbals of sweet "sound. Praise Him with cymbals of loud sound. Let every soul praise "God Almighty.[4] Through me Moses and Joshua shall rejoice and be "glad; and through my giving birth to a child David, the Son of Jesse, "shall rejoice, and through this I shall not be a stranger and a sojourner. "Henceforth it is meet for me to say, 'My ascent is in my mountain'. "Praise be unto Thee, O Lord, my God, Who hath forgiven her trans- "gression. Praise be unto Thee, O Lord, my God, Who hath [fol. 49*a*] "become unto me one who doeth good, for Thou hast holpen my "misery."

And whilst Ḥannâ was praying in this wise, she saw the ten Archangels singing psalms and hymns in sweet and beautiful tones, and each of them overshadowed her with his six fiery wings; and these are they:—Michael, Gabriel, the Seraphim and Cherubim, Raphael, Uriel, Salathiel, Saḳûêl, Râmûêl, Sadâkyâl, and Anânyâl, and they were veiled in a flame of fire. And Ḥannâ heard them saying, "Praise be unto thee, O

"MARY, thou bride of the Father, thou blessed woman who art most "holy. Rejoice, O MARY, thou mistress of the assemblies of the Christians. "Rejoice, O MARY, thou mistress of the happiness of the Nazarenes. "[fol. 49*b*] Rejoice, O MARY, for thou hast become the key of the king- "dom of heaven. Rejoice, O MARY, because thou hast become the "mistress of the freedom of the children of Adam. Rejoice, O MARY, "because thou hast been held worthy to become a mediator between the "beings of heaven and the beings of earth. Rejoice, O MARY, for thou "shalt become the mother of our Creator. And it is meet that thou also, "O Ḥannâ, should be called blessed. Thou didst remain a barren woman "long, but when thou didst bring forth thou didst give birth unto the "mistress of celestial and terrestrial beings. Blessed art thou, O Ḥannâ, "for thou hast become the Mother of God. Blessed art thou, O Ḥannâ, "for [fol. 50*a*] thou hast become the goddess of David and of all the "kings of Israel. Blessed art thou, O Ḥannâ, for we have been bidden "to receive thee into the congregation of heaven." And having said those things the Archangels were hidden from her. And when Ḥannâ had heard these words of mystery concerning what should come to pass, she wondered and gave praise unto God; and she marvelled within herself exceedingly. Praise be unto God Who graciously bestowed upon the blessed woman Ḥannâ more honour and exaltation than upon all the daughters of Israel. May her prayer and her blessing deliver Tasfâ Mîkâêl from the wrath of Christ, and from His condemnation in the Judgment for ever and ever! Amen.

HEARKEN NOW, O MY CHRISTIAN BRETHREN, unto the story which we have found after [making] much [fol. 50*b*] search. There was a certain God-fearing man who prayed without ceasing, and he kept vigil both by day and by night like the angels, and he celebrated the festival of the angels and holy men, and the festival of the martyrs and of those who fought for the Faith, and the festival of the virgins and monks, and he was wont to see hidden things. And he spake thus:—"I saw Joachim "and Ḥannâ arrayed in shining apparel, and with crowns of light upon "their head, and they were standing before the throne of the Father and "the Son and the Holy Ghost, and they were praising [the Trinity], saying, "'O Lord God, our King, our Messiah, and our Creator, we are endowed "'with honour because Thou hast made us honourable, and Thou hast "'exalted us because we begot Thee. [fol. 51*a*] Of whom then wilt Thou "'not make our names to be heard and known throughout all the world? "'For if Thou wilt make our names to be thus heard of men will then "'celebrate our commemoration and festival, even as we see them cele- "'brating the commemorations and festivals of the Martyrs, and of the "'Angels, and of the Righteous, and of the Virgins, and of all those "'who have found favour before Thee. O God, grant Thou favour unto "'him that shall celebrate the commemoration of us, and shall give alms "'in our name. And what shall be the reward from Thee of him that "'shall do this?' And God said unto them, 'Whosoever shall celebrate the "'commemoration of you, or shall build a church in your names, or shall "'write your history, I will make him to rejoice in the world which is to "'come, and I will forgive him all his sins, and I will destroy the writing "'of his debt.'" So [fol. 51*b*] then, O beloved brethren in Christ, pay ye honour unto Joachim and Ḥannâ, and magnify them, and love them, for it was they who begot our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God. Celebrate ye their festivals[1] so that they may become your helpers in heaven on the day of retribution and judgment, when the mother shall not be able to save her children, and when the pearl shall have no power. Verily I say unto you that they shall make intercession for you with our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ that He may shew compassion upon you. Amen.

[1] The festival of Joachim is celebrated by the Ethiopians on the 7th of Miyâzyâ, or April 2: and that of Ḥannâ on the 11th day of Ḥadar, or November 7.

For He Himself said, "Whosoever shall give unto those who believe on "Me a cup of cold water in [My] Name shall not lose his reward with "Me"[1]; and blessed is he who honoureth them, [fol. 52*a*] for unto him shall they pay honour. Blessed is he who loveth them, for Thou wilt love him. Blessed is he who giveth thanks unto them, for they will give thanks unto him in the heavens. Blessed is he who shall proclaim them holy, for they shall proclaim him holy. Blessed and holy is Ḥannâ, and blessed and pure is Joachim. They shall make supplication unto our Lady, the mother of our Redeemer, Jesus Christ, on behalf of him that celebrateth their commemoration when judgment is about to be passed upon him, and our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, shall stand before her beloved Son, our Redeemer, and shall make intercession on behalf of those who celebrate the commemoration of her father and mother, Joachim and Ḥannâ, and she will cause all their sins to be forgiven, and will lead them [fol. 52*b*] into the life which is everlasting. So likewise may she guide into the way of the kingdom of heaven Gabra Mâryâm by her prayers wherein he putteth [his] confidence, and may she deliver him from the death of perdition for ever and ever! Amen.

O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of mercy; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of salvation; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of compassion; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of majesty; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of righteousness; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of glory; O blessed Ḥannâ, daughter of Adam and Eve; O blessed Ḥannâ, the new lamb; O blessed Ḥannâ, I say unto thee, O our Lady, "Here am I"; I say unto thee, "Thou art the ship of "life for my soul, [which shall deliver it] from the sea of fire that would "engulf it." O Lady, [fol. 53*a*] O glorious one, O exalted one, let the gift of thine enduring blessing descend like the rain upon the heads of us (because of thy special covenant which Thine only Son gave unto thee), who are gathered together this day, which is the day of thy festival in this country. Through thy prayers let not the fruit of our trafficking be diminished; and save us from death by pestilence, and from locusts, and from hail; and let the darkness of sin be removed from over us; and may our Adversary be trodden under foot throughout all generations for ever and ever! Amen. May our Lord Jesus Christ write upon the pillar of gold, which shall never be moved out of its place and shall never be thrown down, with a pen of light which emitteth brilliant splendour and radiance, the name of Gabra Mâryâm who had written this Book of the History of the holy and pious woman Ḥannâ, the mother of our Lady, the Holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, for he had it written with watchfulness and with exceedingly great care. [fol. 53*b*] And when the doers of the good pleasure of the God of righteousness are gathered together, may Gabra Mâryâm be among them, and may he sit down [with them at the feast] with joy and gladness, being through her prayers clothed in shining wedding apparel. And through the prayer of Ḥannâ, the smell of whose raiment is like unto that of myrrh and balsam, may the Son of her daughter, our Lord Jesus Christ, destroy and do away the book of sins of the scribe Gabra Krestôs, who was swallowed up in the working of sin, but whose nature became changed into that of a monk, and may He allot unto him a place [fol. 54*a*] with her on the right hand in His kingdom which shall never be destroyed or pass away for ever and ever! Amen. And Amen. May it be! May it be!

[TO BE SAID ON] THE SIXTH DAY OF THE WEEK.

IN THE NAME OF GOD ALMIGHTY WHO POSSESSED THE HEAVENS; AND IN THE NAME OF GOD THE SON, THE ONLY ONE, WHO BROUGHT THE WORLD OUT OF NOTHING; AND IN THE NAME OF GOD THE HOLY SPIRIT, THE PARACLETE, THE SPIRIT WHICH GAVE HIM WISDOM AND UNDERSTANDING, WE WILL BEGIN TO RECITE THE FOLLOWING DISCOURSE ON JOACHIM, OF GLORIOUS NAME, AND OF EXALTED MEMORY, THE FATHER OF OUR LADY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD, THE VIRGIN MARY. UNTO HIM WHO SHALL PROCLAIM IT SHALL BE BENEFIT, UNTO HIM WHO SHALL HEARKEN THEREUNTO AND OBSERVE IT SHALL COME ADVANTAGE, AND HIS PRAYER SHALL GUARD HIM IN THIS WORLD FROM THE CRAFT AND WILES OF THE DEVIL, WHO WILL ATTACK HIM CEASELESSLY, [FOL. 54*b*] AND IN THE WORLD TO COME GOD SHALL ALLOT UNTO HIM A PLACE WITH THE SAINTS, AMONG WHOM MAY BE FOUND HIS BELOVED ONE TASFÂ MIKÂÊL FOR EVER AND EVER! AMEN.

O Lord God, open for me my mouth for a little space that I may speak with my halting tongue, and with my feeble voice, and may preach and declare the history of the birth of our Lady MARY from the loins of Joachim, who is the staff of the kingdom, and from the womb of Ḥannâ, who is the staff of the priesthood. Now the Lord God chose this man Joachim, who was of exalted position, from among all the families of Judah, and from among all the men of the house of David the king, who was chosen to rule over the house of Israel from among the seven sons of Jesse[x], who were well grown and of fine stature, and who had been reared with careful admonitions; [fol. 55*a*] now David was the least among all his brethren. And it came to pass that God sent Samuel the prophet unto the house of Jesse, and into the house of Ephratah of Bethlehem, and when Samuel the prophet had arrived there, he said unto Jesse, "Call thy children, and bring them hither unto me that I may declare

"unto them the word which God hath spoken unto me". Then Jesse sent and called Eliab his firstborn; now he was the oldest of David's brethren, and he was fine of stature and handsome in person. And Samuel said, "God hath not chosen him". And again Jesse called unto his second son, and of this one Samuel said, "The Lord hath not chosen "him". Then Jesse called unto each and all his sons and brought them unto Samuel, and [fol. 55*b*] when Samuel saw them, he said unto him, "God hath not chosen them, and He hath no pleasure in them". And after these things Samuel said unto Jesse, "Hast thou not another son "besides these whom I have seen?" Then Jesse said unto him, "There "is yet a little son who is among the flocks, and he watcheth the sheep"; and Samuel said unto him, "Call him unto me"; and he called David. And when he had come, Samuel saw that his face was joyful, and his eyes were blue in colour, and his stature was as that of a cedar of Lebanon, and his teeth were like white milk, and he was altogether ruddy like a rose, and his arms were like unto the limbs of young lions. Then God said unto Samuel the [fol. 56*a*] prophet, "Behold, this is he "whom I have chosen to reign over the house of Israel. Rise up and "anoint him, and make the horn to increase for him, and make ready a "lamp for Mine anointed, David; and I will make a staff to sprout from "his roots, and a flower which shall never perish from his stem." Then straightway Samuel rose up from where he was sitting, and he took the horn of oil and poured it out upon his head, and said unto him, "God "hath anointed thee, and He hath appointed thee to rule Israel His in-"heritance"; and after he had anointed David, Samuel came into the house of Jesse to eat meat. And in that same night God appeared unto Samuel, and said unto him, "I have made a covenant with My chosen "one, [fol. 56*b*] and I have sworn an oath unto David My servant that "I will preserve unto him seed for ever and ever, and that I will build "his throne from generation unto generation."

And when Samuel the prophet rose up in the morning, he called unto David, and said unto him, "Thus saith the Lord. Behold, I have "exalted My chosen one from among My people, and I have anointed "him with holy oil. His seed shall stand fast for ever and ever, and his "throne shall be like unto the days of heaven." Now the seed of which He spake is our Lord Jesus Christ, and his throne is our Lady MARY, who blossomed from the loins of Joachim her father, the holy son of David, and who was sown in the womb of Ḥannâ, the barren woman, even as the angel [Gabriel] had announced unto her father the mention of her being sown in the womb of his pure [fol. 57*a*] wife, who became a nurse from being a barren woman. How greatly then shall Abraham rejoice because there was born unto him MARY, his daughter, our mother, [from] his son Joachim, that she might reign over the wide extent of the whole world, and not in Hebron and Heshbon [only]. And how great is the rejoicing of Isaac, who was offered up as an offering unto God by the hand of his father Abraham, from whose seed was born our Lord and Redeemer Christ, Who offered up Himself as a sacrifice which was well pleasing unto God! Blessed art thou, O Jacob, thou stem of Joachim, for the ladder of thy prophecy shall be found in the city of the Book that it may be a support unto God. And thou, O Judah, thy bride Tamar[1] shall not be called "harlot", because she was [fol. 57*b*] saved from being stoned with stones by the daughter of thy son Joachim, that is to say, MARY. And again, let us pass on and give consolation unto Naomi, and say unto her, "Henceforth weep thou not for thy sons, and call not thyself "'Marâra'[2], for thy daughter-in-law (literally bride) Ruth the Moabitess "hath given birth unto a son by Boaz who shall be seven times better "than thy sons [for thee], because from his seed the salvation of Israel

[2] "And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi (i. e., Pleasant), call me Mara (i. e., Bitter), for "the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." Ruth i. 20.

"hath been found this day." And thou, O David, sing thou thy psalms to [thy] harp of strings because of the glory of thy daughter who hath sprung from Joachim thy son, and declare all the glory of the daughter of the king of Heshbon, inasmuch as she is clothed in raiment of many colours and is girt about with fringes of gold.[1] And again it is [fol. 58*a*] said, "Wing[2] made of silver, [like that] of the dove whose sides are [cov-"ered with] green gold".[3] And yet a third time, "Her foundations are in "the holy mountains; God loveth the gates of Zion more than all the "habitations (or camps) of Jacob".[4] And thou also, O Solomon, sing [thy] song, and say unto her, "Come, O my beautiful dove, thy speech "is pleasant"; and say unto her, "Turn back, turn back in peace, O thou "who dost possess pleasant things, and in thee we shall see peace".

And now let us return to the praising of Ḥannâ and Joachim, whose marriage was pure, whose marriage was holy, for in it was mingled the Holy Ghost. Their marriage was better than musk and aspalathus, yea, their marriage was better than the marriage of the good ancestors who were before them, [fol. 58*b*] for in their old age, after they were crowned they begat MARY, the candlestick, the mother of the Great Light, who was likened unto the ark (or tabernacle) of Moses and Aaron, the priests and Levites, and who hath become unto us the means of our freedom from the works of sin. Blessed art thou, O Joachim, thou beautiful old man, thou boast of holy men, for the hidden God made Himself manifest in the flesh of thy daughter. O blessed Joachim, O Joachim who wast beautiful in thine old age, thy blessedness exceedeth that of the chosen ones who were of olden time. O blessed Joachim, who wast beautiful in thine old age, thy blessedness is more to be desired than precious stones. Unto whom shall we liken thee? Shall it be unto our father Adam, who was created in the form of God, or unto Abel, whose offering was accepted? O blessed Joachim, unto whom shall we liken thee? [fol. 59*a*] Shall it be unto Seth or unto Hênôs, who first called upon the Name of God? O blessed Joachim, unto whom shall we liken thee? Shall it be unto Enoch who pleased God, and whom God removed from the face of death, and he continueth alive until this present? O blessed Joachim, unto whom shall we liken thee? Unto Noah, or unto his three sons who were saved from the waters of the Flood, together with their wives? O blessed Joachim, thou beauty of the blessed, behold, there have been found in thy house the riches of the rich, that is to say, the queen of all the kingdoms of the world; she it is whom those who keep watch praise, and the armies of light proclaim her holy as they stand before her in sixty [companies of] mighty ones. Of her the armies of the house of David and Solomon [fol. 59*b*] make their boast, from Dan even unto Beersheba. She is the Tables of the Law of Moses, and the almond rod of Aaron, and the inheritance of the priests of the Levites, and the breeches of fine linen, and the mitre, and the tunic. Her fruit is the food of those who hunger, and the blood of her grape clusters is the drink of those who thirst. She is the refuge of those who are cast away, and is the freedom of those who are enslaved.

O blessed Joachim, O blessed Ḥannâ, ye beautiful aged ones, ye are as exalted as the heavens, and as firm as the earth, and as shining as the pearl, and ye are like unto gold which hath been tried [in the fire]; and God hath chosen your flesh wherewith to cover Himself. O blessed Joachim, thy memorial is greater than the glory of all the world, yea, it is more to be desired than sardonyx stone, and it is more beautiful than the gold of Taprobane. Thy memorial shall be praised [fol. 60*a*] until the end of the world, yea, even until the heavenly Jerusalem, the citadel of the heights, shall appear, which shall come down from above, together with the foundation and its twelve gates. Now each of its gates shall be made of a pearl. None shall enter therein who putteth on cursing, neither shall there be within it any who utter revilings. O blessed Joachim, thou art the father of our Lady MARY, who was the mother of awful Divinity according to the annunciation of Gabriel in Bethlehem, when He was born the breathing of the ass and the ox became hot because the prophecy of the prophet Habakkuk[1] was fulfilled. O glorious one, O exalted one, O thou who art to be praised, O righteous one, O chosen one, O man of virtue, O good one of all the good (i. e., O best of all), Joachim, [fol. 60*b*] make prayer and supplication that the most miserable Gabra Mâryâm, who loveth thee exceedingly, may do the works of goodness and righteousness, and that upon him, the faint and weary one, thy blessing may be poured out like rain henceforth and for ever and ever! Amen.

PREFACE TO [THAT WHICH IS TO BE SAID ON THE DAY BEFORE THE] FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

Let us return and again praise the daughter of Joachim and Ḥannâ, the Virgin [MARY], the seat of the Flame Whose Name is 'Emmanuel', and let us tell the story of the glory of her begetting by an honourable and righteous old man, whose works were pure and who kept watch like the angels. It is a good thing, then, to tell the story of the begetting of our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God being a virgin, for it is sweeter by far than honey and sugar. It is like sweet wine to the taste, and like ointment to the bones, and like the hearing of a word of wisdom by [fol. 61*a*] the ear of the man of understanding, and like purple wherewith a man decketh himself, and like a crown of gold to the head, and like eye-paint to the eyes, and like earrings to the ears, and like a collar to the neck, and like seals to the wrists (or forearms), and like rings to the hands, and like a tunic which reacheth from the loins to the thighs.

Exalted then is the memorial of the praise of the Virgin who became like a plant in the house of God, and like the cedar tree on Libanus, and like the cypress tree on the mountains of Hermon, and like a palm tree on the river bank, and like a rose on the margin of a pool, and like a beautiful olive tree in the sanctuary of God. The odour of her mouth is like unto that of the cinnamon tree and of cinnamon oil, and it resembleth the smell of the incense in the house of the sanctuary, and her branches are branches of glory and grace. The memorial of the praise of the Virgin overfloweth like the flow of the river[s] Pison and Euphrates, and is like the flood of Gihon and Tigris, it is like unto the moon when full, it is like unto the sun in [the month of] Marmûdâ[1] in splendour, and it is like unto a lamp which is set upon a stand. Who hath such praise, who hath such glorifying, who hath such sweetness as the woman whom Joachim begot? I desire greatly to be her servant, for I know that she will become unto me a counsellor for good, and that she will console me in my sorrow and affliction, and that through her I shall find gratitude with many and honour with the elders [fol. 62*a*]. Before the face of the mighty I shall make myself be considered marvellous even though I hold my peace, and they shall wait until I speak. They shall draw nigh unto me, and among the congregation I shall appear as a good man; for in sorrow and weeping there is nought but joy and gladness. The will of the Virgin is deathless, and her love for man is abundant, happiness and goodness are in her hands and never-ending riches, in her speech are doctrine, and knowledge, and honour, and in her words are peace and love. For this reason I preach and I tell the story of the birth of our Lady MARY from the loins of Joachim, the staff of the kingdom, and from the womb of Ḥannâ, the staff of the priesthood. Come then, O

[1] I. e., the month called بَرْمُودَة by the Arabs, and ⲫⲁⲣⲙⲟⲩⲧⲉ by the Copts, and ማኒያዝያ: by the Ethiopians; it was the equivalent of the eighth month of the ancient Egyptian year, i. e., the fourth month of the season pert  , or April.

prophets of the Good [God], and be ye my helpers [fol. 62*b*] that I may declare the sweetness of the glory of your daughter, the mother of light. We will ask you, and you shall inform us, for thus is it written in the Book, which saith, "Ask thy father, and he shall tell thee; and thine elders, "and they shall relate it unto thee".[1] And again it is written in the Book, which saith, "With Thy hidden things they have filled full their bellies; "they have filled full their children, and have left their superabundance to "their children".[2] It is you whose bellies are filled full with the mystery of the hidden things of God, and your children who have been filled full are the Apostles, according to my belief. And again the prophet saith, "Instead of thy fathers shall be born unto thee children, whom thou mayest establish as angels for all the earth.[3] Verily they have become filled full [fol. 63*a*] with the hidden things of the mystery of Divinity, for they have stablished in all the earth the new ordinances of the prophecy of the Prophets and of none others, and they have left their superabundance unto their babes, of whom the Book saith, "These are the peoples "whose offspring and children are [occupied] in the ordinances thereof". Some of them have become archbishops, and metropolitans, and bishops; and some of them have become priests, and deacons, and sub-deacons, and readers, and singers; and unto some of them hath been given the power to prophesy; and unto some of them hath it been given to know the interpretation of the word which is hidden.

Come then, and gather yourselves together, O all ye nations, [fol. 63*b*] and peoples, and congregations of Jacob in the house of Joachim, the pure man, wherein ye will find a holy marriage feast, without blemish and without grief, which is like unto the drinking of wine which maketh glad the heart of man, and unto ointment which maketh to shine the face, wherein is neither trouble nor labour. When the daughter of Joachim and Ḥannâ, the Virgin MARY Sôlyânâ gave birth unto Christ the King, the mountains became the bread of life, and the hills produced grapes of blessing, and the waters of the sea became milk and honey. In this house there are none of the many spirits of sickness which have been smitten with the sharp arrows of sin, and we declare that it is meet that we should gather ourselves together in the marriage chamber, that is to say, in [fol. 64 a] the house of Joachim, the father of MARY, [and of Ḥannâ], who bore the mother of our Redeemer Jesus Christ. In the beginning God made the heavens which are above, and all that is therein, and He created this [earth], and after that the garden of life. And again [He created] the Sun, and the Moon, and the stars, and the sea, and the abysses, and the fish, and the birds of the heavens which fly, and beasts great and small, and the winds, and the clouds [which bring] rains and dew, and He created everything, and ordered it well. And when He had made an end of creating His creation, He created our father Adam in His own form and likeness, and He breathed upon him the spirit of life, and he became a living man by reason of [fol. 64 b] the spirit of life. At that time MARY, the daughter of Joachim, stood (i. e., existed) in the belly of Adam in the form of a white pearl, which shone in his right side, and was a perfect likeness [of her]; and the similitude of her flew up into the heights of heaven. And again God shewed it unto Moses in the desert when He was telling him how to make the building of her tabernacle. And God commanded him to make an ark of wood which could never be eaten by worms, and to cover it over with gold, both the inside and the outside thereof. In that holy ark God commanded him to place the two Tables of stone, whereon were written the Ten Words, the writing whereof was the writing of God. And above that ark was the mercy-seat of gold, and above [fol. 65 a] the mercy-seat were the Cherubim which were made of carved gold; and from the ark God was wont to appear unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto many of the priests to whom He wished [to shew Himself]. And again, Solomon built a sanctuary in the form of this tabernacle of cedar wood and pine wood, and he covered the floor, and the roof, and the walls thereof with plates of gold, and on the doors thereof were engraved figures of palm branches and of animals which were like unto cherubs in fine gold. And inside the Holy of Holies, at the place where the holy ark rested, was a figure of MARY, the daughter of Joachim. And Solomon made two Cherubim of red gold which overshadowed her with their wings, and [here] God was wont to appear, sometimes openly, and sometimes [fol. 65*b*] in a dream, and sometimes in a vision, unto those to whom He wished to appear from Moses unto Zacharias. Then, after a few days, God spake unto the children of Israel, when they provoked Him to wrath, saying, "Where is the house which ye can build for My resting place?[1] Where "is the place which [is fit for] My habitation? Behold, the habitation "whereunto I will come is that which the hand of man hath not made, "and which shall be the salvation of Adam and his posterity."

[TO BE SAID ON] THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

HERE BEGINNETH THE BOOK OF THE HISTORY OF THE GENERATIONS OF OUR LADY MARY, THE DAUGHTER OF JOACHIM, THE SON OF DAVID.

Solomon begat Nathan, Nathan begat Levi, Levi begat Mattatha and Ḳesrâhâ, and Ḳesrâ [fol. 66*a*] begat Joachim, the father of our Lady MARY, the holy Virgin. Now Matthat begat three daughters. The name of the oldest was Mary, the name of the second was Sophia, and [the name of] the third was Ḥannâ. And Mary bore Salome, and Sophia bore Elizabeth, the mother of John, and Ḥannâ bore MARY [the Virgin]. Similarly, Joseph was descended from David the king, for when Nathan, the brother of James, died, Matthat married his widow, so that he might raise up seed to his brother. And he begat Eli, (now Eli and James were brothers), and Eli begat Joseph; behold, then, [Joseph and Mary] were alike related each to the other. And the daughter of Joachim became the child of Ḳesrâ, [fol. 66*b*] the brother of Matthat, and Joseph was the son of the brother of Joachim her father; therefore Joachim is said to be of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David. Now Nathan begat two sons, that is to say James and Joachim, and when Nathan died, Mattatthias, the son of Levi, married his widow, who was of the family of Solomon of the tribe of Judah, and he begat by her a son and called his name Eli. So, then, he became the brother of James and of Joachim. And Eli married a wife, and he died without begetting a son; then James took his widow to wife and begat by her Joseph, the spouse of our Lady MARY.

And again we will declare unto you how our Lady MARY was descended [fol. 67*a*] from Adam. [From Adam] she came down into the body of Seth, shining like a white pearl; and from Seth she came into the body of Enos; and from Enos to Cainan, and from Cainan to Mahalaleel, and from Mahalaleel to Jared, and from Jared to Enoch, and from Enoch to Methuselah, and from Methuselah to Lamech, and from Lamech to Noah, and in this wise she dwelt in their bodies, passing from the body of one into the body of the other. And again, she dwelt in the bodies of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and from Jacob she came to Judah. Then she came to David and Solomon, and passing from one to the other she came to Joachim. And Joachim [fol. 67*b*] said unto Ḥannâ his wife, "I saw the heavens opened, and a white bird went forth therefrom "and hovered over my head". And likewise Ḥannâ said unto him, "I had "a dream this day, and I saw a dove sitting upon my head, and it entered "into my belly"; and thirty days after they had told each other these things, that is, on the seventh day of the month Naḥassê[1], Ḥannâ conceived our Lady MARY, on the day which God blessed. Blessed is he who shall clothe the naked. Blessed is he who shall feed the hungry. Blessed is he who shall set free him that is in prison. Blessed is he who shall visit the sick on that day, for he shall obtain a portion in the kingdom of heaven [fol. 68*a*] with Joachim and Ḥannâ, and with MARY the Virgin for ever and ever. Amen.

And six months after it became known that the blessed Ḥannâ had conceived the kinsfolk of Joachim her husband and those of herself heard [thereof], and they came unto her, and said, "Is the matter which we "hear concerning thee [true]? What is this thing which hath come upon "thee after thy days [for child-bearing] are passed?" Now there was a certain woman among the kinsfolk of Ḥannâ who was blind in one eye, and she touched the belly of Ḥannâ, saying, "Is it true, what I have "heard? My sister, how canst thou conceive being an old woman?" And afterwards she touched her eye which was blind, and straightway [fol. 68*b*] it was opened for her, and she saw the light. Then she said unto Ḥannâ, "O Ḥannâ, blessed art thou because thou hast in thy womb a "child who whilst yet unborn can heal the sick; and when he hath made "himself manifest and hath come forth from thee, how many will be the "people whom he shall heal!" And many sick folk came and touched Ḥannâ, even as the woman had done, and they were made whole and recovered from their sicknesses; and this matter became a hard one unto all the elders of Israel. May the prayer of Ḥannâ, and the prayer of Joachim, her husband, protect as a thing well pleasing unto her daughter her servant Gabra Mâryâm for ever and ever. Amen. And Amen. May it be! May it be!

May our Lord Jesus Christ write down the name of Gabra Mâryâm, the poor and miserable sinner who, at his own expense, paid to have written this Book of the History of the blessed Ḥannâ, [fol. 69*a*] and the History [and] Praise of the begetting of the honourable Joachim, with a pen of light which shall never be destroyed. And may the intercession of Joachim and Ḥannâ on the day of retribution and rebuke deliver both Gabra Mâryâm and the scribe who wrote this book, Gabra Krestôs, the defiled one, who is unfit to be touched, from the path of sin for ever and ever! Amen. And Amen. May it be! May it be!

A MIRACLE OF THE HOLY AND BLESSED WOMAN ḤANNÂ, THE MOTHER OF MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and her blessing [fol. 69*b*] be with her servant Gabra Mâryâm, for ever and ever. Amen.

Now there was a certain man of the tribe of Judah who was called Joachim, and he married a wife from among the daughters of the priesthood and her name was Ḥannâ; and both were good and well pleasing [unto God], and they observed the Law of God. And Joachim's wife was barren, and they dwelt in grief and sorrow because they had no children. And they went daily to the church and offered up prayers to God with weeping and groaning, and besought Him to give them children; and they gave of their possessions unto the poor and needy, and unto the church, and they continued to hope [fol. 70*a*] and believe that their petition would be accepted by God, and that He would give them children. Now one day Joachim and Ḥannâ his wife went forth and entered into the house of the sanctuary, and as they were standing up in prayer they saw the doves rejoicing with their young; and as they looked they were sorry and grieved because they themselves had no children, and by reason of their abundant sorrow they fell into a slumber and slept. And Ḥannâ saw in her dream that the staff which Joachim had in his hand blossomed and bore fruit, and it seemed as if that fruit was in the body of Ḥannâ; and when they had awakened, they rejoiced and held converse together concerning what they had seen. Then they glorified God and gave thanks unto Him, and they came to their house, [fol. 70*b*] saying, "God's will be "done!" And after these things Ḥannâ conceived, and her conception became known, and she blessed God, saying, "If He hath given me a "child I will give it as an offering unto God". And she dwelt [in her house] and added unto her prayers and supplications, and she gave her possessions unto the poor and needy with joy and gladness, saying, "How "can I reward God for all which He hath done unto me?" And she refrained from eating every kind of unclean food, and she made supplications to God and bowings [before Him] in great abundance, and prayed that He would preserve that which He had given unto her. And it came to pass when the days of her conception were ended, on the first day of Genbôt she brought forth a daughter, who was brighter than the sun, the beauty of whose [fol. 71*a*] face was sweeter than honey and sugar, and the smell of whose odour was more lovely than that of any flower. Now when her kinsfolk and neighbours heard [thereof] they rejoiced with a great joy, and they gathered themselves together and came unto her, and when they saw her daughter they marvelled exceedingly, and held their peace. Then they held converse among themselves, and said, "We have never seen a child like unto this, for the grace of God in its "fullest measure is upon her, and the light of God filleth all her members"; and they continued seven days with Joachim and Ḥannâ his wife, and they rejoiced and proclaimed the mighty deeds of God, that is to say the grace of God. [fol. 71*b*] And they called the child "MARY", and when the seven days were ended, they came into their houses in peace.

And Joachim and Ḥannâ dwelt [in their house] for three years and brought up their daughter MARY, and they glorified God, and gave thanks unto Him for their daughter and for all which He had done for them. And they performed good deeds in abundance with fasting and with prayer, and they gave alms unto the poor and needy. Now when three years were ended, during which time they had brought up their daughter MARY in purity, Ḥannâ said unto Joachim her husband, "O

"my brother, remember that we made an agreement in God's Name that "we would give our daughter as an offering [fol. 72*a*] unto God, and that "my daughter should not tread upon any ground except that which is in "the house of God." And when Joachim heard these words from his wife Ḥannâ, he rejoiced with great joy, and he made ready everything which would be [necessary] for the way and presents for the house of God. Then they invited their kinsfolk, and their friends, and all the men of their house, and they took their daughter and brought her into the house of the sanctuary. And when the priests and all those who were in the house of the sanctuary heard [this], they went out to receive her, and they embraced them with a spiritual embrace. And they proclaimed Joachim, and Ḥannâ his wife, and their daughter blessed, and they laid their hands [fol. 72*b*] upon them, and blessed them with a great blessing. And they said unto them, "Verily God hath looked upon your sorrow "by [giving you] this excellent maiden"; and unto MARY they said, "Salu- "tation unto thee, O thou blessed and chosen one of God!" Then they took her, and brought her into the house of the sanctuary on the third day of the month Tâḫshash[1], in the peace of God. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant Gabra Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

[SALUTATIONS UNTO THE MEMBERS OF THE BODY OF ḤANNÂ, HE MOTHER OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.]

SALUTATION unto the mention of thy name, which is more pleasant than the singing of a song. SALUTATION unto thy members, and unto the black hair of thy head, O mother of MARY, Ḥannâ, [fol. 73*a*] thou life of all the world; in thee are established both the beings who are [made] of flesh and blood, and the angels which are in the heights of heaven above. SALUTATION unto thy head, and unto thy face [which is like unto] the morning, and SALUTATION unto thine eyebrows, and unto thy shining eyes. Deliver me, O Ḥannâ, from sorrow, and woe, and lamentation, even as Noah, the righteous man, who was faithful with his children, was delivered through thee from the abyss of transgression, and from the flood. SALUTATION unto thine ears and unto thy cheeks with words of salutation, and SALUTATION unto thy nostrils and unto thy lips with words of praise. O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY, let not the sword of the flood come unto me, and if my enemy build his palace in heaven, let the sword of death quickly purify him. SALUTATION unto thy mouth, and unto thy crystal teeth, and [fol. 73*b*] unto thine awful voice, and unto thy breathings, and unto thy throat, and unto whatsoever appertaineth unto thy neck. That thou mayest shew me, O Ḥannâ, the passing away of my foolish enemy, behold, I wait for thee in this place. SALUTATION unto thy shoulders, which are the curtains of the back, and are joined unto thy delicate breast, and unto thy tender bosom. O book of life, Ḥannâ, thou mother of MARY, Sâyadâ, let mine enemies be destroyed and let them not be left for a reward, even as thou didst destroy Judas, the son of perdition. SALUTATION unto thy hands and arms, and SALUTATION unto thy fore-arms, and unto thine elbows, and unto the palms of thine hands. O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY, mother of Christ God, let mine enemies be destroyed by the spear of the hidden God, [fol. 74*a*] even as aforetime Eglon was destroyed.[1] SALUTATION unto thy white fingers, and unto thy nails which are covered [with ḥenna], and SALUTATION unto thy breasts, and unto whatsoever belongeth unto thy side. O Ḥannâ, thy majesty is hard to describe. Let mine enemy receive as his reward punishment and affliction, and let the back of the serpent be pronounced accursed. SALUTATION unto thy belly and unto thy heart, and SALUTATION is meet for thy bowels and for everything which is in thee, and for thy mind, the like of which cannot be found, O Ḥannâ. The created beings which are below and the created beings which are above make their boast in thee, and they make their prayers unto thee. SALUTATION unto thy navel and unto thy blessed womb, and SALUTATION unto thy thighs and unto thy knees, O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY [fol. 74*b*], the mother of Christ God, if mine enemies would fight against me at morn or eventide, let the path of mine adversary be choked with thorns. SALUTATION unto thy feet, and unto the heels thereof, and unto the sinews, and SALUTATION unto the soles of thy feet, and unto the toes which are decorated with nails. O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY, let me ask thee one thing: How long, O my Lady, shall I live together with those who hate men, and peace, and love? SALUTATION unto thy stature which neither diminisheth nor shrinketh, and SALUTATION unto thy person, and unto the going forth of thy soul, and unto thy body of flesh. O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY, the mother of Christ, Who is the Firstfruit of grace, let the tongue of mine enemy be tied in the time of temptation and trial with a strong chain, and with [fol. 75*a*] a rough shackle. SALUTATION unto the burial of thy body in purple apparel which was indestructible, and SALUTATION unto thy grave which was in the inheritance of thy father, the field of Yophônî. O Ḥannâ, mother of MARY, the mother of Christ the Redeemer, let not one send me unto [my] death in [this] world [suddenly], but let me wait until I can repent a little, not, I say, not with the multiplying of words and much speech, but let me sing thy praise for a brief space, and not keep silence concerning it; O Ḥannâ, make my heart to please Him. If mine enemy put forth branches, and if he increase his stature, then let the sword of death cut down his trunk. Praise is meet for MARY, and worship, and the singing of psalms, [and for] the mother of MARY, Ḥannâ, and these together are like unto the precious stones onyx and topaz. May mine enemies be destroyed [fol. 75*b*] and be left without posterity, even as the children of Korah[1] were destroyed!

SALUTATION unto thee, whose name is sweet, whose memorial is salted with the salt of Divinity, Ḥannâ, thou holy woman, thou mother of MARY, whose King is in the heights. SALUTATION unto thee, O Ḥannâ, thou who art the morning, and unto thee, O MARY, who art the heaven which gave birth unto Christ, the Sun, Who burneth up the thorns of error. SALUTATION unto thee, O thou stone of chalcedony, Ḥannâ, thou brilliant pearl, wherefrom went forth MARY the Virgin, who bore the Flame. SALUTATION unto thee with the salutation of the martyrs Fâsîladas[2] (Basilades?) and Galâwdêwôs[3] (Claudius). O Ḥannâ, may thy people, the people who gather together in thy name, receive the fruit of righteousness. SALUTATION unto thee. When I heard the [fol. 76*a*] rumour of thy wisdom, which is as high as the heavens, my mind said, "Let Ḥannâ "perform the saving of my soul". SALUTATION unto thee, O thou innocent woman Ḥannâ, thou spiritual dove, from whom went forth MARY the wise one, who bore the Word of the Father. SALUTATION unto thee, O Ḥannâ, thou pure one, and unto MARY, the thorn bush, who gave birth to Christ the King, who destroyeth sin. SALUTATION unto thee. When the angel of death, who plucketh away, cometh unto me, O Ḥannâ, separate not thyself from me; and tear thou in pieces the writing of my debt, and turn [my] lamentation into gladness.

[Fol. 76*b*] A MIRACLE OF ḤANNÂ AND JOACHIM WHO BEGAT MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO HIM THAT IS [BOTH] HEAVENLY AND EARTHLY. May their prayer and their blessing be with their beloved Gabra Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Behold, it is related that the blessed Ḥannâ, the wife of Joachim, continued in frequent prayer, and that God gave unto her a seed of blessing. And after seven months it was known that Ḥannâ had conceived, and the kinsfolk of Ḥannâ, and the kinsfolk of her husband came unto her, and said, "What is this report which hath reached [us]? [Hast thou "conceived] after [fol. 77*a*] thy days have passed?" And they felt her body to see whether she had conceived. Now there was a certain woman, the daughter of Arsabân, who was of the kin of Ḥannâ's mother, and who was blind in [one] eye; and she touched Ḥannâ's body unknowingly, and straightway she was healed. Then she said unto Ḥannâ, "Blessed "art thou, O Ḥannâ, for among [all] the creatures of the world there is "none like unto thee, who can with her body heal the eyes of the blind"; and her kinsfolk worshipped her, and she was glorious unto them, even like the sun, which is more glorious than the morning star. And the fame of her was heard throughout all the ends of the world, and they brought unto her all those who were sick and diseased [fol. 77*b*], and they touched her body and were healed. Then they all said, "If the Child can heal "[the sick] whilst He is in the womb, what will He [not be able to do] "when He hath been born?" And when the children of Israel heard [this], they gathered themselves together, and said, "What shall we say "concerning this matter? For behold, Joachim and Ḥannâ have rent the "kingdom, and Ḥannâ hath conceived, and by her womb shall she be "healed, and she shall reign over us". Then a certain man said unto them, "This shall be a stumbling-block unto you: Come, let us kill them "by stoning them to death, even as it is written"; and they all held their peace. And at midnight an angel [fol. 78*a*] of the Lord, whose name was Gabriel, came down from heaven, and said unto Ḥannâ and Joachim, "Rise up, O ye of noble race, and betake yourselves to the mountain "and hide, and Ḥannâ shall bring forth there her child MARY, who shall "be full of grace and majesty". O may she deliver me from the snares of the serpent Satan! May the prayer and the blessing of Joachim and Ḥannâ be with their beloved Gabra Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen. O friends of Ḥannâ and Joachim, who begat our Lady MARY, [pray that] He may deliver us from the snares of the cursed serpent for ever and ever! Amen. Hallelujah by reason of the abundance of our excellence of Joachim and [fol. 78*b*] Ḥannâ, and hide ye us from Satan. And forget Thou not me, O our Father, which art in heaven, who had this book examined, and who caused it to be recited, and who had it translated, and who read it.

O miracle which our Lord and God, Jesus Christ, wrought by His life-giving death; may He have compassion upon His servant Gabra Mâryâm! Now there was a certain sick man who for twelve years groaned and cried out with pain which had come upon him through his abundant sin, and he was tried in the fire even as gold and silver [are tried]. And by day and by night [fol. 79*a*] he used to cry out, "O "Saviour of the world, deliver me. O Saviour of the world, have mercy "upon me". Then our Lord Jesus Christ said unto him, "Get thee out, "O thou evil one, who workest evil, from the body and soul of the man who believeth on Me". And this devil went forth from him in fear, and in trembling, and with cries of grief before the awful majesty of the Redeemer of the world, at the request of her who gave Him birth, the woman who redeemeth the world. O all ye sons of Christians, believe readily and have no doubt in your minds that He can heal your sicknesses, since He hath anointed my body (May He have compassion upon the sinner [fol. 79*b*] Gabra Mâryâm with the compassion of His mercy for ever and ever! Amen). O Thou Who didst come down [from heaven] for the redemption of the world, and didst deliver it with the children of Adam, deliver Thou me, the sinful and feeble transgressor. Praise be unto Thee, O Thou Saviour of the world, Who didst come down [from heaven] for our sake. Praise be unto Thee, O Thou Saviour of the world, Who wast brought into this world by MARY, our mother.

Praise be unto Thee, O Saviour of the world, Who wast crucified for our salvation; we all believe in Thy perpetual manifestation. Since Thou didst come to bear the doom of the judge, and [the shedding of] the blood of Thy side and feet I commit my soul for protection into Thy glorious hand, O Jesus Christ, Thou God. [fol. 80*a*] Heaven and earth shall be brought into judgment because of Thy scourging with rods, and because of Thy being sold for a few pieces of silver like a slave. The Jews laid upon a young man the yoke of the cross of Jesus Christ, Whom they crucified in the field of Golgotha, driving nails into His feet and hands. I take refuge in Thy sufferings, O Thou Son of MARY, Thou only One, for Whose cross worship is meet. Hallelujah by reason of the abundance of Thy compassion! O Saviour of the world, Thou King, deliver us, we beseech Thee, from the punishment of body and soul.

[To him that knoweth these] no [devil] shall draw nigh; and he shall neither be smitten by the arrows (or darts) of his adversary, nor by the stone which may be hurled at him, nor by the spear; for the angels shall protect him, and they shall keep him in safety under their wings for the sake of these names, which are the names of their God. O Lord our Redeemer, protect and deliver Thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mikâêl from Bôryâ and the devils, and save and heal her [if she become afflicted with] pneumonia, pleurisy, fever (or inflammation of the bowels), and stomach-ache and colic.

II. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, [One God.] A PRAYER AGAINST THE EVIL EYE [IN] THE LATRINE, AND A PRAYER AGAINST THE DISEASE CAUSED THEREBY. As our Lord Jesus Christ was journeying in the country of Ṭĕbĕr-yâdas [Tiberias(?)], and His disciples with Him, they saw the figure of an old woman sitting upon the ground; and she was one who caused trouble, and was terrifying [in her appearance], and, if a man came [to her], was exceedingly [harmful]. And her eyes shot out lightnings, and her[2] feet were like unto a wheel of fire; and there came forth from the mouth of the woman flames of fire nine cubits long. And the disciples of our Lord Jesus who followed Him, said unto her, "What is the matter with this cursed woman? If she looketh upon a ship "wherein a man saileth upon the sea, it goeth straightway and overturneth. And if she "looketh upon a horse, or a camel, she maketh the animal and him that rideth thereon "to fall down through having seen her, as soon as it setteth out on its way. And if she "seeth a leprous [child] sucking milk she doth not drive it away from the breast; and if "she seeth a man with children through the evil eye and through her works of every "kind this cursed woman destroyeth them, and bringeth them to an end." Now when our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ had heard these things, He said unto His disciples, "Take "this woman of the evil eye, and make up a fire, and carry her thereto, and throw her into "it and burn her, and the East wind, and the West wind, and the South wind, and the North wind shall scatter her [dust] abroad". Let the memorial of His name make to depart and remove the suffering of the evil eye, and the curse, and Bârya, and the evil eye, and bronchitis, and pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs, and the like, from thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mikâêl.

III. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. A PRAYER AGAINST BRONCHITIS AND PLEURISY, AND THE EVIL EYE OF A HOSTILE MAN, AND THE EVIL EYE OF BÂRYÂ. Salutation unto thee, O thou who drivest away devils, Fânûêl, through whose cry God will not permit those men who repent of their sins to suffer punishment. Salutation unto thee, O thou who drivest away devils, Fânûêl! By the might (?) of the exalted Creator men have knowledge concerning the speech of destruction, for Thou art God, the merciful One. Salutation unto thee, Fânûêl, drive thou away the devils from me, my lord. Keep thou vigil to help [me], for the constitution of man is in me. O Fânûêl, keep vigil to help me. Salutation unto thee, O Fânûêl. Work thou a miracle of good upon me. Through the black art let not the worker in metals who would work against me pierce my habitation (or cave). O Lord, draw Thy sword upon mine enemy Mastêmâ (i. e., Satan), and smite thou with sickness him that would make trouble [for me], O Fânûêl Malakôfîmî. O Fânûêl Petrôs, priest within and without, on the day wherein I commit sin of any kind judge thou me in such wise that I may be forgiven. And deliver from bronchitis and pleurisy Thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mikâêl.

Let me be sealed with the sign of the cross with five nails which Thou didst carry for Bĕ'êl, the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, wherewith Thou didst put to shame Bĕ'êl and Bôryâ, and wherewith the black devils were scattered, and the memorial of the name of Ḍalwâgî was blotted out, and deliver Thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mikâêl.

It is of great advantage to the woman who hath children to suckle and bring up, and it must be written down and worn by her with the help (?) of God, the Glorious and Most High, until the years of childbearing are ended. Preserve and protect from the disease caused by the evil eye of Bâryâ; and from coughs, and bronchitis, and pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs and bowels; and from diarrhoea, colic, and dysentery; and from the disease caused by worms, and fistula; and from the evil eye of the zar, and from the cracking of the skin; and from the evil eye of the sorcerer and enchanter; and from the evil eye of Ḥ ûmanna and Ḍalâwâgî; from the evil eye of Gâlâ, from the evil eye of Xaḳlâ, from the evil eye of 'Eslâm and 'Amhârâ; from the evil eye of Tabôt and 'Ans; and from the evil eye of Maḳâwĕzî Fĕrḳĕḳât, and Sashasaḳât Tĕkûsât..... deliver thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mikâêl.

There[1] was a certain man whose name was Sûsenyûs (Socinius), and he married a wife and begat a male child. And in the matter of the first child Wĕrzĕ[wĕ]lĕyâ (Ursula) came, and killed him, and went away; and his mother cried out and mourned for him. And when Saint Sûsenyûs heard her weeping, he mounted upon his horse Cherubim, and took a spear in [his] right hand, and went to [seek] her. And he found an old woman sitting under a tree, and he asked her questions, and spake unto her. Then he turned his face towards the East, and he knelt down upon his knees, and he prayed, saying, "O Lord Jesus Christ, "Thou God of the Christians, Thou King of kings, let me slay Wĕrzĕwĕlyâ.... so that she "may not slay children who suck, and may not do harm [to women and] their husbands. "Then will I become a martyr for Thy Name's sake, I Saint Sûsenyûs." And as he continued to pray in this wise to God, he rose up, and a voice came from heaven, saying, "Behold, "power shall be given unto thee from God to slay her". And he saw an old woman sitting under a tree, and he asked her, saying, "Where hath Wĕrzĕwĕlyâ gone?" And the woman said unto him, "Into the garden which is in front of thee". Now when Saint Sûsenyûs heard [these things], he rejoiced, and he mounted his horse, and took a spear in his right hand and went to her, and he slew her and pierced her right side. And Wĕrzĕ[wĕ]lĕyâ said unto him, "O Lord Jesus Christ, I swear to Thee by the seven ranks of the Archangels "Michael and Gabriel, Seraphim and Cherubim, Uriel, Raphael, Fânûêl, Saḳêl, Sadakôêl, and "Îktenâêl — these are they [who stand] before the throne of the Sustainer of all the world, "the God of Ananias, Azarias, and Misael — that I will not contend against Thy Name, and "I will never journey along the path where It is to be met with, or enter into any church "wherein Thy Name is commemorated, or into any house or place whatsoever, and this "prayer shall be placed either upon children, or upon young men, or upon those who are full "grown, unto the end of the world. Amen." O deliver from the pains and diseases caused by the evil eye of Baryâ, and from coughs, and bronchitis, and pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs and bowels; and from diarrhoea, and colic, and dysentery; and from the disease caused by worms, and fistula; from cracking of the skin; from the sorcerer, and Ḳûmanna, and Dalâwâgî; from the evil eye of Xaḳla; and from the evil eye of 'Eslâm and 'Amḥarâ, thine handmaiden 'Ahĕta Mîkâêl.

VIII. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. A PRAYER. O Masṭĕma, Markebyûn, Maḥafrĕkîn, Fêfrân, Magôma-'esât, Dĕlfĕlêl, Ẓardâêl, Gashâḍâêl, Mendânâêl, Afṭĕtatâ-mawa'î-ḍara, Êlêlê, Ṣarâêl, Ṣarâêl, Ṣarâêl, Henâêl, Henâêl, Kesbâêl, Êlêf, Baḥîl, Bĕrhânâêl, Salâtâêl, Azyâs, Masayâ, Kûkûêl, Abnâdî, Gâmîêl, Bĕhîl, Fĕlfĕl, Ḥûrḳûryûn, Mahâbîl, and Kîftâhî, fetter ye with a fetter the devils, and overwhelm them, and deliver Thine handmaiden Ahĕta Mîkâêl from the evil eye of Ṣalâwâgî, and Zâr, etc.

[1] The translation of an Ethiopian version of this story was published by Dr. KARL FRIES in the "Actes" of the VIIIth Oriental Congress, held at Stockholm in 1889, Semitic Section (B), p. 55 ff.

IX. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. A PRAYER FOR THE BLOOD. O Santam, Wântam, Ḳarnawŭ, Lîsa, Lasîsa, Alĕyûs, Malzazîn..... as thou dost collect the power of the hail and the winds, even so collect, and make strong, and stablish the blood of thine handmaiden Ahĕta Mikâêl. Now the barren woman gave birth to seven [sons] in Thy fear, O God; therefore by these Thy names let Thine handmaiden Ahĕta Mikâêl have progeny. O Delxatâ, Titixar, Xarêxiren; by these names, O Thou Who dost collect the power of the hail and the winds, collect, and make strong, and stablish the seed of man in the body of Thine handmaiden Ahĕta Mikâêl. O Enlit, Madjîr, Madjîr, Madjîr, Diḳôrôn, Bazyâs, Bĕtâêl! By the power of these Thy names slay not the child in the body of Thine handmaiden 'Aheta Mikâêl.

The text concludes with a short petition in which God, "to Whom nothing is im-"possible", is besought to destroy utterly the names of Bóryâ, and of the devils, and of the demons who cause fever, pleurisy, inflammation of the lungs, rheumatism, and cholera to 'Ahĕta Mikâêl.

PREFACE.

The present volume contains the Ethiopic texts, and translations of them into English, which are found in the manuscripts of the Lady Meux Collection, numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5. Three of these manuscripts are illustrated by series of coloured pictures which represent three distinct periods of Ethiopian art, and in the coloured plates, which are interleaved throughout the work, very careful reproductions of them, both as regards form and colour, have been given. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that the texts and their coloured illustrations are now published for the first time.

The oldest manuscript of the group contains a selection of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, with coloured illustrations, many of them being full-page. It was, in the first instance, written for a king of Ethiopia who, judging from the large size of the writing, intended to present it to some monastery or public church in his capital wherein it was to be read from on certain occasions either before the assembled monks or before a congregation of the laity. The name of the royal personage who had the manuscript written was mentioned, according to immemorial usage in Ethiopia, at the beginning and end of each Miracle, with the view of obtaining a blessing from heaven as a reward for his pious work. In the process of time, however, the king died, and the volume passed into the hands of another king, who caused the name of his predecessor to be erased throughout, and his own written in its place, so that he also might obtain a blessing. The name of the first royal owner cannot be recovered, but the name which stands in its place is David; how many owners the volume may have had between David and the king whose name he caused to be erased cannot be said. Now three kings called David reigned over Ethiopia; David I. reigned from A.D. 1382 to A.D. 1411; David II. from A.D. 1508 to A.D. 1540; and David III. from A.D. 1716 to A.D. 1721. But the only one of these three periods which agrees tolerably well with the archaeological evidence supplied by the volume is the first, and we shall probably be correct in assuming the manuscript to be a product of the end of the XIVth or beginning of the XVth century. The evidence derived from the binding is of no value in deciding this question, for it belongs to a much later period than that of the oldest leaves of the volume. It was in the reign of David I. that the wood of the Cross of Christ was brought into Ethiopia, amid great rejoicings, and to this king such a handsome manuscript of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary would have been a peculiarly pleasing possession. After David the manuscript passed into the hands of another owner called Takla Haymânôt, but whether he was of royal blood or not there is no evidence to shew. The last owner of the manuscript in Ethiopia was Theodore, the late king of Abyssinia, who by some means obtained possession of it, intending to place it in the library of the church which he had determined to build in honour of the Holy Redeemer of the World at Maḳdalâ (Magdala). It is well known that for several years before his death he caused the whole country to be carefully searched for manuscripts, and all that were found were brought to his capital, where he caused the words, "Belonging to the [Church of] the Holy Redeemer of the World", to be written in Ethiopic upon the first page of each, ተአምረ ፡ ማርያም ፡ ዘቅዱስ ፡ መድኃኔ ፡ ዓለም ።

of which were preserved by the Ethiopian Church. It is not easy to see what principle guided the scribe in making the selection of miracles in the first instance, especially as many of them are merely versions made from Arabic translations of stories of miracles written in some European language; though a large number are native compositions which record marvellous events which took place in Ethiopia. The MSS. rarely agree in the number of the Miracles which they record. Thus among British Museum MSS. Or. 651 contains 30; Orr. 520, 653, and Add. 24,188 contain 33; Or. 641 contains 40; Or. 635 contains 42; Or. 650 contains 51; Or. 648 contains 54; Or. 647 contains 59; Or. 634 contains 76; Or. 654 contains 125; Orr. 640, 644, and 655 contain 154; Or. 652 contains 160; Or. 642 contains 200; Orr. 636 and 638 contain 202; Or. 637 contains 303; and Or. 643 contains 316. The selection, however, once fixed, was perpetuated by the scribes, and the artists, having in the first case copied European illustrations, continued to reproduce them to the best of their ability, the modifications which crept into them being the result of incapacity and carelessness rather than a desire for variety.

The second MS. of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the Lady Meux Collection belongs to a much later date, and is probably not older than the third quarter of the XVIIIth century. This is tolerably certain from the fact that king Takla Haymânôt and his wife Abâla Dengel are mentioned on fol. 5*b* col. 1, and the archaeological evidence indicates that the second king of this name, who reigned from A. D. 1769 to A. D. 1777, is here referred to. While the earlier MS. contains fifty-one pictures, the later has only forty-eight, notwithstanding the fact that the number of Miracles in it is larger, and has some introductory compositions relating to the time, and manner, and order, and seasons of the reading of the Miracles. The pictures in the manuscript are most interesting from a comparative point of view, because they enable us to note the modifications in the method of treatment which have crept in between the periods in which the earlier and the later MSS. were written. They prove, too, that there was a traditional manner of illustrating the Miracles of the Virgin, and also that the artist considered himself free to make small modifications which did not interfere with the motif of the old design. It is to be noted also that at the time they were painted the artist felt obliged to fill up the background of his illustrations and to enclose them also within borders which had the effect of giving an air of greater finish to his work. That the reader of the following pages may have the opportunity of comparing the artists' work of both periods throughout, Lady Meux decided to give coloured reproductions of every picture in each volume, and they have been interleaved in the English text as nearly as possible with the Miracles which they illustrate, the oldest naturally coming first.

It will be noticed that besides a selection of Miracles the manuscripts among other things contain two accounts of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary[1]; and the history of the travels of the Virgin and Child in Egypt which the Archbishop Theophilus received from Mary herself; and the Salutations to the Members of the Body of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The last composition is as interesting as remarkable, for in it the name, and virtues, and members of the body of the Virgin are lauded in forty-two verses, each containing five lines. In them the Virgin is likened unto a "flower of springtime", the "Zion of God", the "Ark of the Law", the "Two Tables of the Law", etc., and for some of his epithets, similes, and allusions the writer drew inspiration from the Song of Solomon. It is not easy to explain why the Salutations should be forty-two in number, or why they were directed to be said forty-two times; that some special significance was attached to this number by Biblical writers seems clear from such passages as Numbers xxxv. 6, and Revelation xi. 2; xiii. 5. It will be also remembered that the Negative Confession of the

Book of the Dead of the ancient Egyptians contained forty-two addresses, i. e., one to each of the forty-two gods in the Hall of Maâti, wherein the soul of the deceased was weighed.

Of the apocryphal literature given in this volume the most important example is the text of the "History of Ḥannâ, the Mother of the Blessed Virgin Mary"; it is edited from a small octavo manuscript in the Lady Meux Collection, which I believe to be unique. The work is divided into seven sections, each of which was intended to be read on a certain day of the week. The author seems to have drawn upon certain ancient traditions concerning Ḥannâ, but his commentary upon them is an independent work. According to him Ḥannâ's maternal ancestress was called Faustina, who was a lady of noble birth, and who prophesied that her seventh granddaughter would bring forth the "blessed moon", i. e., Ḥannâ. The statement which he makes with reference to the origin of the Virgin Mary is very remarkable. According to it the seed from which she sprang was placed by the Almighty in the body of Adam in the form of a white pearl, one half of which was formed of dust, when He created him. From the body of Adam it passed into Seth, and from Seth to Enos, and so into the bodies of all the Patriarchs, one after the other, from Abraham to David, and from David to Joachim Ḥannâ's husband. During this long period the seed remained in a quiescent state; it "neither perished nor made itself manifest", and it did not pass into the body of any one of the wives of the Patriarchs from Eve downwards. When Ḥannâ had been married to Joachim nine years, during which period they had suffered much tribulation at the hands of their kinsfolk and acquaintances in Israel, both husband and wife went into the temple of God and prayed in great bitterness of spirit. That same night God appeared unto Ḥannâ in a vision, in the form of a white bird which came down from heaven; in days of old it had overshadowed the Cherubim who guarded the Ark of the Covenant, and it had beneath its wings the hand of a man, which grasped within it the cord of life. This bird was the spirit of life, and it took up its abode by Divine agency in Ḥannâ's body. Now when Ḥannâ and Joachim were together, and the seed in the form of a white pearl, which was to form the flesh of the Virgin Mary, was transferred to her body, it united with the spirit of life, and germinated forthwith, and the Mother of our Lord began her material existence. This, in brief, is the remarkable account of the conception of the Virgin Mary by Ḥannâ, which is given by our author, and which the artist has tried, not very successfully, to represent pictorially. (See Plate cii).

A perusal of this History of Ḥannâ proves that at the time when it was written the mother of Mary had been endowed by her adorers with many of the attributes which belonged to her daughter, and that the honour paid to her was, in many respects, little inferior to that paid to the Virgin Mary. Ḥannâ and her husband Joachim are mentioned as being the father and mother of the Virgin Mary before the end of the IVth century, and before the close of the VIIIth century Ḥannâ was revered as a saint in the Eastern Church. In the following centuries legends of many kinds clustered round her memory, and a series of miracles, which were declared to have been wrought in her name, or by means of her relics, appeared in Christian apocryphal literature. But whatever form her history may assume, or whatever variations may occur in it, the principal statements of every writer are based upon traditions which are as old as the early centuries of the Christian Era. The remarkable position which she held in the Ethiopian Church is proved by the fact that after the narrative of her life given in the following pages we have a series of "Salutations" to her name and memory, and to the various members of her body, which have been drawn up in imitation of those addressed to the Virgin Mary. From these we may learn the greatness of the power which she was believed to possess in heaven and upon earth.

The last document of the Lady Meux Collection printed in this volume contains a series of magical prayers which were drawn up and inscribed upon a long, narrow strip of parchment, and which were intended to serve as an amulet to protect the wearer against the attacks of unclean or evil spirits, and sicknesses of every kind. This document, like all others of the class, is very badly written, and is full of strange spellings and mistakes; but the contents are of considerable interest to all students of Oriental magic. The wearer of an amulet of the kind relied for exemption from calamities of every class, both spiritual and material, upon the knowledge of the names of the archangels and other celestial beings; by calling upon or pronouncing such names he or she caused the attacks of devils and fiends to be without effect. With a view of illustrating this class of literature, and the general contents of rolls of magical prayers, three supplementary texts have been added.

The group of Ethiopic texts of the works printed in this volume will be found at the end of the English translations, and they have been printed on one side of the paper for the convenience of the student. I have followed the originals as closely as I could, believing it far better to reproduce the text before me than to make an eclectic edition of the works. The variant readings and the additional texts found in the later manuscript of the Miracles of the Blessed Virgin Mary are given in their proper places, but the former only shew that the greater number of the variations which are found in different copies of the same work really belong to different versions, and that they are not variants in the true sense of the word. The translations have been made tolerably literal, and a Biblical style has been adopted here, as elsewhere, because, as the late Professor William Wright often said, it suits the style and subject matter of the works. In a few places the text has been paraphrased. Interleaved with the translations are the long series of coloured plates, so that the reader may follow the narratives both by word and by picture.

The translations have been printed on one side of the paper only, for only by this means could the group of pictures which sometimes illustrate a miracle be brought near the text to which they relate. The binding of the volume is a careful copy of that of the original manuscripts, and the pattern on the covers has been stamped from a brass block which has been specially cut for the purpose. The printing has been carefully executed by the firm of W. Drugulin of Leipzig, and Dr. Chamizer, their manager, has superintended the work; the coloured plates form yet another example of Mr. Griggs' skill in reproducing with fidelity the illuminations and illustrations with which pious folk in all generations have delighted to ornament their sacred books.

The works printed in the following pages are of singular interest to those who study the history of the Church of Ethiopia and Abyssinia, and to the student of religion generally, and to the philologist; to these and many others they afford new material for investigating the development of Christian religious thought among Eastern nations. By publishing in a manner so thorough and comprehensive the valuable manuscripts which Lady Meux has in her possession, she is rendering a great service to Oriental research, and my most grateful thanks are due to her for permitting me to assist her in her public-spirited work.

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE MANUSCRIPTS.

1. The Ethiopic text of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, printed in the following pages is edited from the Lady Meux Manuscripts Nos. 2 and 3. The earlier of the two manuscripts (No. 2), which is called A throughout this volume, is a venerable vellum book which measures about 14 in. by 13 in., and consists of 105 leaves. The number of pictures in the volume is fifty-one. Each page, except one, when not occupied by a picture, contains two columns of writing, but the number of lines to a column varies. The oldest leaves of the book have usually seventeen or eighteen lines to the column, but a few, which seem to have been written by another hand, contain twenty-five. The unnumbered leaf which has been inserted between folios 1 and 2 has three columns to the page, and each complete column contains twenty-seven lines. The title, and the first few lines of each Miracle or composition, and the names of the Virgin Mary and of David the king are written in red. The MS. is bound in stout wooden boards, covered with purple leather stamped with a cross and with borders made of laced work patterns and scrolls, and the insides of the covers are lined with brightly coloured, flowered silk, the work probably of some Persian or Indian loom. It was originally written for a royal personage, for at the beginning and end of every Miracle we find the words, "May her prayer deliver our king", written in the ordinary hand found in the manuscript. But who the royal personage was cannot be said, for everywhere his name has been deleted, and that of "David" written by a later hand in its stead. Now, the Ethiopian Kings' Lists prove that three of the kings of Ethiopia were called David. The first reigned from A. D. 1382 to 1411; the second from A. D.

1508 to 1540; and the third from A. D. 1716 to 1721. Now the last of these cannot have been the king who is referred to in our manuscript, for the archaeological and palaeographical evidence derived from the volume makes it impossible; the first or the second king of the name must therefore be intended. It is generally thought that the Ethiopian scribes did not illustrate their books with coloured pictures before the end of the XIVth or the beginning of the XVth century, and this view is probably correct; admitting that it is, I believe that we shall be right in assigning our manuscript to the latter period, and in regarding it as one of the earliest examples of its class. Both text and pictures seem to have been produced before the first half of the XVIth century, in which period king David II reigned. The pictures which illustrate the Miracles are of neither equal merit nor value, but they are of the greatest importance as specimens of Ethiopian art of the earliest period. They belong to the time when the artist had attained considerable skill in drawing conventional representations of the Virgin Mary, and angels, and the like, but he did not know how to make a finished picture. He had not yet learned how to fill up the background, and he made some of his pictures so large that he left no room for a border. His paintings are mixtures of crude designs, which are filled up in places with painful attention to minute details of colouring in garments having variegated patterns made up of stripes and dots, and of pictorial hints of artistic conceptions which the artist or scribe was unable to carry out. With this manuscript, as with many others, it is impossible to make general deductions, for there is no standard with which the student may compare it. In some particulars the pictures resemble those found in Ethiopic MSS. of the XVIIth century, while in others they resemble those of a later date; but an examination of many illustrated Ethiopian manuscripts convinces me that the present example belongs to the period when the custom of illustrating books was not firmly established in Ethiopia, i. e., some time between A. D. 1400 and A. D. 1500. The artist seems to have been influenced by the pictures or illuminated manuscripts which were the work of Spanish or Italian artists, most probably of the former, for the faces of our Lord and the Virgin Mary are distinctly those of Spanish men and women. On the other hand, for many pictures he appears to have had no copies from which to borrow subjects, but to have drawn upon his own imagination for many of the scenes which he intended to illustrate the text before him. This portion of the work is of peculiar interest, for it reproduces for us the dress of the people among whom the artist lived, and the furniture of their houses, such as water pots, drinking vessels, anḳarîbs or bedsteads, trays from which guests ate their meals, etc. The devils with black, animal bodies, and human faces with protruding red tongues are, of course, the product of the native imagination, and represent pictorially ideas connected with demonology which had been current in the Eastern Sûdân and Ethiopia for centuries.

The manuscript was, in all probability, originally bound in plain, hard wooden boards, and the purple leather binding in which it now appears belongs to a period much later than that in which the oldest part of the volume was written. From the worn and greasy state of the bottom right hand corners of the leaves it is clear that it was much used in ancient days during services which were held either in a monastery or in a church, and the grease stains indicate that it was read in the night time. The following are the contents in the order in which they occur in the manuscript:—

2. The later of the two manuscripts (No. 3) containing the Ethiopic text of the Miracles of our Lady, the Blessed Virgin Mary, which is called B throughout this volume, is a vellum book which measures 12¾ in., by 11¼ in., and consists of 79 leaves. The number of the pictures which illustrate the text is forty-eight. Each page of the work, when not occupied by a picture, contains two columns of writing, and twenty-two lines form a complete column. The text is written in a fine, regular hand of the XVIIIth century. The title, and the first line or two of each Miracle or composition, and the name of the Virgin Mary and of the man who had the book written, are in red. The MS. is bound in stout, wooden boards, covered with brown leather stamped with a cross and with borders made of laced work patterns and scrolls; the insides of the covers are lined with brightly coloured, flowered silk. It was originally written for a man called Ḫayla Mâryâm, ኀይለ ፡ ማርያም ፡ whose name occurs at the beginning and end of all the compositions and Miracles written in the book except the last five, where for some reason Herakles ኤራቅሊስ ። is found. The probable explanation is that the last part of the manuscript was written at the expense of Herakles; but the names of the scribe and artist are not mentioned. The text throughout is the work of one scribe. The following are the contents in the order in which they should occur in the manuscript, but several of the leaves have been misplaced in the process of binding.

3. The Life of Ḥannâ, the mother of the Blessed Virgin Mary, is edited from a small octavo volume (Lady Meux manuscript No. 4) which was probably written in the XVIIIth century. It measures 7¹/₄ in. by 5¹/₄ in., and contains 81 leaves. The quires, which are signed with letters on the top left hand corners, are eight in number, and each contains ten leaves. Each page of text contains two columns, and usually the number of lines to a column is 16. The first few lines of each section are written in red, as well as the names of our Lord, and those of Ḥannâ, Mary, and Joachim; and the manuscript is bound in stout, wooden boards, which seem to belong to the period in which it was written. Ornamental head pieces consisting of designs in plaited work, painted in red and yellow, will be found on foll. 11*a*, 12*a*, 72*b* and 76*b*. The scribe's name was Gabra Krestôs ገብረ ፡ ክርስቶስ ፡ (see fol. 53*b*, col. 2), and he seems to have written for Gabra Maryâm ገብረ ፡ ማርያም ፡ (see fol. 53*a*, col. 2), who prays that in return his name may be inscribed by God upon a pillar of gold in letters of bright and shining light. The name of the artist who painted the pictures was Ḥabta Gabrăêl ሐብተ ፡ ገብርኤል ፡ (see fol. 10*b*, line 14). Here and there is a prayer on behalf of Tasfâ Mîkâêl ተስፋ ፡ ሚካኤል ፡ (see fol. 50*a*, col. 2, and fol. 54*b*, col. 1), but it is not clear why this man's name appears. From the note on fol. 10*a* we learn that the manuscript was written in the famous Dabra Lîbânôs in the country of Shoa. The contents are as follows:—

I. A series of pictures of saints, etc., painted in yellow and red upon a black ground, or in black and red upon a yellow ground, or traced in outline (Foll. 1—9).

4. Lady Meux Manuscript No. 5 is an amulet which consists of three narrow strips of parchment measuring together 6 ft. 4½ in. by 3¾ in. It is inscribed with a series of magical prayers on behalf of 'Ahĕta Mikâêl, and is ornamented at the top with a figure of the archangel Michael, and at the bottom with a rectangular design having eyes. The text is badly written, and is very difficult in places, to make out, and at the edges several letters have been rubbed away; the document was probably written about the middle of the XVIIIth century. The contents of this manuscript are of considerable interest, and are of a very comprehensive character from the point of view of magic; but the text is so corrupt that it is not easy to understand the writer's meaning in many places. The prayers are nine in number. In the first are enumerated the angels whose names will guard the man or woman who repeats them from the missile or weapon of any enemy, and from the attacks of the devils who bring internal diseases of every kind upon human beings. These names were also to be pronounced whenever a man or woman went into or near an old or unclean house, for in such places devils and fiends were supposed to dwell. One of the most powerful devils was Bôryâ, or Bâryâ, who seems to have been chief of a legion of devils, and to have had the power to smite a man with pleurisy, pneumonia, fever, colic, cholera, rheumatism, and the like. In the second prayer we have the story of a woman fiend whom our Lord and His disciples met as they were journeying through the country of Tiberias. She is said to have had the power to destroy travellers by land and sea, and to kill children; lightnings went forth from her eyes, and flame from her mouth, and her feet were like a wheel of fire. By our Lord's command she was burnt in the fire, and her ashes were scattered to the four winds of heaven. She was supposed to live in desert places and in unclean houses, and to have the power to smite people with inflammation of the stomach and bowels when visiting the latter. The third prayer is directed against bronchitis, pleurisy, the evil eye of an enemy, and the evil eye of Bâryâ, and contains a petition for merciful consideration at the Judgment. The fourth prayer consists of words which are supposed to have been written by Jeremiah the Prophet when he was bound hand and foot and cast into the pit. By the gift of prophecy he was enabled to declare the power of the "five-nailed Cross" of Christ, and to proclaim his own resurrection which should take place through it. This prayer is of rare occurrence. The fifth prayer is directed against the pains caused by wounds; it is not clear whether the Walda Karrâsḳî mentioned in it was a husband, father, son, or brother of 'Aḥĕta Mîkâêl. The sixth prayer is directed against Bâryâ, Masrayâ, and Ḍalwâgî, and the legions of devils under their rule, and is intended "to put them under a ban, and to fetter "them, and to break their power"; the names by which this was to be effected are Solomon, Shradrach, Meshach, Abednego, etc. The seventh prayer is directed against the diseases caused by cold aud chill, cholera, fistula, rheumatism, epilepsy, worms, and infectious skin diseases. It is ordered to be written down and worn by the woman who is bearing children, to whom and to whose children it shall be of "great advantage" when they are being suckled by her. Following the prayer comes the curious story of Socinius, who married a wife and begot a male child; soon after the birth of the child a female devil called Ursula came and killed him and went away. On this Socinius took his spear, and mounted his horse, and rode off to seek and to slay her. On the way he found an old woman sitting under a tree, and she told him that Ursula was to be found in a certain garden; and when he entered this garden he found her seated in the company of devils. Socinius rode at her and drove his spear into her right side, and killed her, but before she died she swore by the Archangels of God, and by the three Holy Children that she would never contend against the name of Socinius, that she would never enter into any church where his name was being commemorated, nor approach any house, or place, where the prayer was to be found. Hence the woman who wore an amulet inscribed with the name of Socinius was protected against the attacks of Ursula, the slayer of children, and against the sicknesses and diseases which her companion devils might attempt to bring upon her. The eighth prayer is directed against the fiends Zâr and Ṣalâwâgî, and contained a number of names the recital of which would enable the wearer of the amulet to fetter and break their power. The ninth prayer is directed against miscarriage, and contains an entreaty that God will stablish the blood of 'Ahĕta Mîkâêl and give her progeny; the names invoked by her are those of the powers which control the hail and the winds. Finally she beseeches God, "to Whom nothing is impossible", not to slay the child in her body, and to destroy utterly the names of Bôryâ and of the devils and fiends who smite men with diseases.

With the view of illustrating the contents of Ethiopian amulets I have appended the texts and translations of three good examples of the principal varieties; the translations will be found at the end of the Introduction, and the texts at the end of the volume.

II. THE CONTENTS OF THE MANUSCRIPTS.

THE MIRACLES OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

The Miracles of the Virgin Mary preserved in Ethiopic are, for the most part, translations of Arabic versions which were made from originals written either in Coptic or in one of the languages of Southern Europe, such originals forming parts of one or more of the great Collections of Legends of the Virgin which were current in Europe during the XIth and XIIth centuries of our era. The Ethiopic translations were made, I believe, in the XIVth or XVth century, and in spite of their passage through Arabic into Ethiopic, the narratives of the miracles exhibit Western influence and treatment to a remarkable degree.

The original home of the Miracles of the Virgin was Jerusalem and its immediate neighbourhood, and there is good reason to believe that a large number of them were in circulation in Syria and Egypt long before the end of the IVth century, and as about a century later (A.D. 494) Bishop Gelasius and the Council condemned at Rome the "Transitus, i. e., Assumptio sanctae Mariae", we may assume that compositions which recorded miracles wrought by her were included among the miscellaneous apocryphal works which were condemned at the same time. But no condemnation, even by the highest ecclesiastical authorities, could stop the spread of literature dealing with the miraculous, and the Christians who were both pious and superstitious caused copies of the Miracles of the Virgin to be multiplied everywhere. It is doubtful if the clergy would declare such works to be harmful to the soul, for the writer and reader of them understood each other, and both felt that the real purpose of books of miracles was to amuse as well as to edify. Between the Vth and the XIth centuries works which dealt with the life and miracles of the Virgin became exceedingly popular, and before the end of the XIth century it had become the fashion in Europe to form "Collections" or "Cycles" of miracles, which were issued, as it were, under authority, and were copied in monasteries and other places as authentic and standard works. Wherever a church was built in honour of the Virgin Mary the pious hastened to provide the clergy with a copy of the Book of her Miracles, and each church thus became a new centre for the propagation of stories of her power, and of the love and mercy which she was ever ready to shew to men, women, and children. During the XIIth, XIIIth and XIVth centuries further "Collections" of miracles were formed, and when the printing press superseded the scribes devout men reproduced by its means numberless copies of the narratives of the miraculous, which had been collected by the pious of by-gone generations. In the course of collecting and editing many of the miracles assumed new forms, and many additions were made to the original stories; parallels were collected and, together with variant narratives, were incorporated into the great mass of legends of the Virgin which sprang up in the East. As time went on, manuscript copies of such "Collections" were carried into the East and were translated into Arabic, and, probably by way of Egypt, they entered Ethiopia, where they were received joyfully. In a very short time Ethiopic translations or versions were made, and native scribes and artists devoted their time and energies to the production of manuscripts which were similar to those that are reproduced in this volume. The earliest works of this kind would probably contain only "foreign" miracles, but in process of time "native" miracles would be added to them. In the Lady Meux Manuscripts Nos. 2 and 3 we have numerous examples of both classes of miracles, and it is not difficult to find the sources of most of those which may be described as "foreign". Among those for which equivalents in European languages have been identified may be mentioned the following:—

I. The Virgin Mary and Bishop Dexius (see page 20). According to the Ethiopic text the Virgin Mary received from the bishop a copy of a collection of her miracles which he had made, and she was so pleased with him that she gave him an episcopal throne and a garment which she had obtained from heaven, and at the same time she told him that none of his successors should occupy the former or wear the latter. After his death a presumptous successor took his seat upon the throne, and arrayed himself in the apparel, in spite of the warnings of the clergy; but he was suddenly smitten by the angel Râguêl, and he fell from the throne and died immediately. In this story we at once recognize the miracle which the Virgin Mary wrought for Hildefonsus of Toledo, to whom she gave an alb; his successor Siagrius tried to put it on, but died in the act of doing so (see H. L. D. Ward, Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii, p. 604). The story of the gift of the alb is told in the life of Hildefonsus by Cixila, Bishop of Toledo, in the following words:— Et elevatis oculis suis suspexit in circuitu ejus, et vidit omnem absidem ecclesiae repletam Virginum turmis de canticis David admodulata suavitate aliquid decantantes. Aspiciensque in eam (ut ipse sibi bene conciis et bene charissimis referebat) sic eum allocuta est voce: "Propera in occursum, serve "Dei charissime, accipe munusculum de manu mea, quod de thesauro Filii mei tibi "attuli; sic enim tibi opus est, ut benedictione tegminis quae tibi delata est, in meo "tantum die utaris; et quia oculis fidei fixis in meo semper servitio permansisti, "et in laudem meam diffusa in labiis tuis gratia tam dulciter in cordibus fidelium "depinxisti, et vestimentis gloriae jam in hac vita orneris, et in futuro in promp- "tuariis meis cum aliis servis Filii mei laeteris" (Migne, Patrologiae, Tom. xcvi. col. 48). The same story occurs in connexion with St. Bonet, Bishop of Clermont, in Auvergne, A.D. 689—699. To him also the Virgin gave a garment, and when he proclaimed what had been done for him, another ecclesiastic went to the Church of St. Michael, hoping that the same favour would be shewn to him, and began to put on St. Bonet's apparel; as he was doing this he was struck dead.

See G. F. Warner, Miracles de Nostre Dame collected by Jean Mielot, London, 1885, p. 19.

II. The Virgin Mary and the scribe who wrote her name in gold (see page 28). In the Ethiopic text the name of the scribe is given as Damianus, and he is said to have written the Virgin's name in gold, and silver, and ናዝወርድ፡ nazward, which word I have rendered by "rose-coloured paint", believing the word to be connected with the Arabic نسرين "rose". In return for this devotion to her the Virgin takes him to heaven. Of this story we have two versions in Latin, and one in French; see A. Lecoy de la Marche, Anecdotes Historiques, Légendes, et Apologues, tirés du Recueil inédit d'Étienne de Bourbon, p. 119; and Mussafia, Marienlegenden, Heft V. pp. 36, 37. In all three the monk is nameless, and besides writing Mary's name in colours he is said to have kissed it wherever he found it; when he falls sick the Virgin visits him, and at his death takes his soul to heaven. The following will be useful for purposes of comparison.

Étienne de Bourbon.

De monacho qui nomen beate Virginis consueverat vel consuetus erat scribere tribus coloribus, auro, minio, croco, quando in libris occurrebat, conscribebat, et ejus horas devote dicere solitus erat, et nomen ejus osculabatur inventum inscriptum devote. Cum autem sacramenta omnia recepisset et graviter laboraret, cuidam fratri, longe a domo infirmorum jacenti invigilanti, visum est quod Beata Virgo de celo descenderet at dictum infirmum, et juxta lectum ejus diceret ei: "Ne timeas, fili; te enim "oportet gaudere cum celicolis, quia fuit "tibi cure nomen meum honorare; nominis "signacionem accipiens, in libro vite as-"criptus, in celo mecum vive. Surge ergo "hinc et sequere me." Et in celo con-

Tranquillitatis amator monachus quidam mente et corpore castus, ut creditur, gloriosissime virgini intimo cordis affectu deserviebat et horas illius specialiter et devotius stando cantabat. Hic itaque artibus utilioribus deditus sacras scripturas scribere consueverat, in quibus sacratissime virginis nomen triplici colore pingebat. Quod scriptum auro, aduro, croceo vel tyro, et absque colore nigro, suppliciter adorabat et sepe deosculans corde semper et ore et opere illud gerebat. Tandem iuvenis pius et quietus infirmatus est et crescente dolore a fratrum consortio remotus est. Quid moror? Pater monasterii mox advocatur et, si quid erat sinistrum, eger humiliter confitetur. Tunc

unus ex fratribus, in dormitorio longe a domibus infirmorum semivigil jacens, mestorum consolatricem e celo venientem prospexit. Que juxta lectum egroti stans hylari vultu talia dicere cepit: "O "bone fili, ne paveas! Te enim cum "celicolis gaudere oportet. Et quoniam "tibi non fuit honerosum meum nomen "purpureum scribere, nominis sanctum "omen accipies et in libro viventium "scriptus super celos mecum amodo vives. "Surge igitur, dilectissime, et sequere me! "Ero enim perenniter tecum ad solamen, "que olim tecum eram, dum scribebas et "honorabas meum celebre nomen." Tunc imperatrix celorum Maria a terris discessit et sibi famulantem secum deduxit.

The description in the French version of the manner in which the scribe painted Mary's name and kissed it is as follows:—

sainte escriture et escrire;
le nun nostre Dame peignoit
de trois colors et escrioit,
et d'or et d'azur et de blans;
de vermeillon et de safran
le nun nostre Dame peignit,
ja noire color n'i meist,
quant ere escriz, si l'auroit,
apres mout sovent lo baisoit;
en cuer, en boche et en ovre
le nun nostre Dame porte. (ll. 9—20).

III. The Virgin Mary and Bishop Abbas (see page 29). According to the Ethiopic text the name of the ecclesiastic who cut his hand off because of the

carnal desire which was stirred up in him through the kiss of a woman upon it, was Abbas, and he is called "Bishop of Rome" therein. But from Add. 33,956 (see WARD, Catalogue of Romances, vol. II. p. 674), he was called Caesarius, and he is said to have become Pope. In the Legenda Aurea, (ed. T. GRAESSE, Dresden and Leipzig, 1846, p. 367) the story is told of Pope Leo I., who died A.D. 461, in the following words:— Leo papa, ut in miraculis beatae virginis legitur, dum in ecclesia sanctae Mariae majoris missam celebraret, et dum fideles per ordinem communicaret et quaedam matrona manum ejus osculata fuisset, ex hoc in eum vehemens carnis tentatio insurrexit, at vir Dei in semet ipsum saevissimus ultor insurgit et eadem die manum se scandalizantem occulte penitus amputavit et a se rejecit. Interea murmur oriebatur in populo, cur summus pontifex divina more solito non celebraret. Tunc Leo ad beatam virginem se convertit et ejus providentiae totaliter se commisit. Tunc illa continuo sibi adstitit et manum illi suis sanctissimis manibus restituit et conformavit jubens, ut procederet et filio suo sacrificium immolaret. Leo igitur omni populo, quid sibi contigerit, praedicavit et manum restitutam omnibus evidenter ostendit. Probably as a result of what had happened, we read that Leo Chalcedonense concilium celebravit, solas virgines ibidem velari instituit. See also MUSSAFIA, Studien zu den mittelalterlichen Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 75; and Heft II. pp. 4 and 88.

IV. THE VIRGIN MARY AND ISAAC THE MONK (see page 31). The Ethiopic text relates that the Virgin promised Isaac, a monk, to whom she shewed herself in all her beauty, that he should be with her in heaven in three days. As a parallel may be quoted the story given by WARNER from Mielot (Miracles de Nostre Dame, No. 66, p. xxxv) in which we are told that a child prebend offered some cake to a wooden image of the child Jesus, and that Mary told him that, as a reward, he should be with herself and her Son in Paradise in three days; the child took to his bed and died on the third day. Mary begged the boon from Christ, Who said, "Belle mere, lenfant sera dedens trois jours auecques "moy et papera; car il sera couronne en mon paradis. Il ne fist pieca si bon "papin." See also HEROLT, Discipuli Promptuarium, No. 652.

V. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE CHILD MARY (see page 33). In the Ethiopic text the Virgin is made to promise the child Mary that she shall be with her in three days because she had such a strong love for the festival of the Virgin.

The story, however, seems only to be a variant of that given by Mr. WARNER, Miracles de Nostre Dame, No. XXI. p. xvii, wherein the Virgin promised a girl called Muse, or Musa, that if she forsook the follies of the world she should be with her in thirty days. On the twenty-fifth day the girl fell sick, and on the thirtieth she died. For the Latin and French versions of the story see MIGNE, Patrologiae, tom. LXXVII, col. 348; NEUHAUS, ADGAR's Marienlegenden, p. 42; WARD, Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii. p. 620. In the Latin text the Abbot Probus tells the story of his sister Musa.

VI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE PAINTER (see page 34). The Ethiopic text merely reproduces a well known legend of which several versions are known in Latin and French; see WARNER's Miracles, No. LXIV, p. xxxiv; and Mr. WARD's Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii. p. 628. The shorter form of the story in Latin is as follows:— Quidam pictor diabolum cum cornibus, et caeteris membris, ut turpius poterat, et magis horribilem pinxit. Idem vero imaginem Beatae Mariae Virginis ita decentem, et ita pulchram, ut potuit, depinxit diversis coloribus. De hoc vero diabolus iratus, et invidens, festinanter accedens ad pictorem, quaesivit dicens: Cur se tam horribilem, et deformem, et Beatam Virginis Mariam tam pulchram, et decentem depingeret? Qui respondit, quod ita se res in veritate haberet, sicut facta pictura ostendit. Diabolus vero iratus pictorem ab alto, ubi depinxit imaginem B. Mariae Virginis quadam die voluit praecipitate, confregitque ligna in quibus stabat pictor, qui et casum periit: mox imago piissime Virginis pictori manum porrexit, et eum ne caderet firmiter retinuit, sicque eum a daemone custodivit. See HEROLT, Discipuli Fromptuarium de Miraculis B. Mariae Virginis, No. 718. (In Discipulis Redivivus, Augsburg, 1728, p. 897.) The longer form is as follows:— Pictor quidam pro vitae suae merito Dominae nostrae familiaris, in partibus Flandriae fecerat sibi nomen doctae manus artificio. Hic quoque quotiescumque pingere diabolum necesse habebat, turpem turpiter sicut ars ei suggerere poterat, expressius figurabat: Cui ille in visione noctis apparuit, et cur eum sic irritaret, cum furore, et ira quaesivit. Pictor respondit bene hoc ago, quia semper te passus sum omnium, quae feci malorum incentorem, et adhuc turpium cogitationum moliris insidias, quibus emollitam animae meae demoliaris constantiam. Et Sathan graves minas intentans, monebat ut a sua laesione cessaret. Sed ille ex hoc ipso animatus est, et magis quam ante paratus suscitare Leviathan. Post-

modum vero una dierum, ipse in porticu cujusdam Ecclesiae Beatae Mariae Virginis imaginem pinxit, et juxta possibilitatem artificii, sicut decebat operae vario picturae eidem gloriam, et honorem dedit. Sed et juxta illud, quod serpenti dictum est: Ipsa conteret caput tuum, subtus pedes imaginis diabolum figuravit, nigris coloribus turpem, et tenebrosum, sicut decebat amatorem turpitudinis, et Principem tenebrarum. Quod ille non aequis oculis aspiciens, malignandi potestatem a Deo expetiit, et accepit, sed sibi ad contumeliam, Christo, et Matri ejus ad gloriam: adhuc enim suspensis trocleis, et supposito firmiter tabulato, monstrum illud pingebatur, et ecce turbo vehemens omnes illas artis pictoriae machinas concussit, et in terram excussit. Quod ut persensit homo stupidus ad imaginem Domini levavit cor pariter, et manum; quae, mirum dictu, donec venirent, et qui ei subvenirent, manu injecta ipsum retinuit, et servavit illaesum. See Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Historiale, Lib. VII. cap. ciiii. p. 259 (Vol. IV of Bibliotheca Mundi, Douay, 1624). See also Wright, Latin Stories, No. XXXI. p. 34.

VII. The Virgin Mary and Zacharias (see page 38). In the Ethiopic text the young Roman makes a chaplet of fifty roses daily, and presents it to the Virgin, and when the season of roses is over he offers salutation instead of roses. This version is, however, probably a variant of the story of a certain boy who, with his playmates, made garlands, but while his companions placed theirs upon their own heads, he offered his to the Virgin Mary. When he grows up he becomes a monk, and is eventually promoted to the rank of abbot; as a monk he said one hundred Aves to the Virgin daily. Once, when on a journey through a wood, he knelt down to say his Aves, which he had forgotten, and a thief, who was going to stab him, saw the prayers that fell from his mouth turn into roses, etc. The story in the Latin runs:— Erat quidam nobilis habens uxorem Deo, et B. Mariae devotam, sed cum non haberent filium, rogabant Deum, ut eis prolem daret, quod et factum est. Quam cum omni, qua poterant, diligentia nutrierunt. Cum autem filius ad annos discretionis pervenisset, et videret alios pueros crinalia de rosis, et floribus habere, similiter faciebat, et ad Ecclesiam deportabat, ubi imaginem gloriosae Virginis invenit, et ei crinalia offerebat, et ejus capiti devote imponebat, et sic quotidie faciebat, cum ei tempus aderat oportunum. Venit ergo tempus, cum parentes ejus eum nuptiis tradere vellent, eis pro viribus restitit, sed virginitatem suam Deo, et Beatae Mariae Virgini obtulit, dicens, se Deo et Beatae Mariae Virgini Matri ejus velle perpetuo famulari. Post vero factus est Monachus, et in bona vita de die in diem in melius proficiens, sed cum videret, quod priorem consuetudinem et devotionem ulterius facere non posset, quia rosas et flores non habebat, eo quod erat Monachus, non ei licebat floribus occupari, ne alios scandalizaret, cogitans tamen, quod quotidie centum Ave Maria diceret, et inde crinale B. Mariae faceret, sicque faciebat quotidie cum lachrymis, et puro corde. Factum est una dierum, ut pro negociis Monasterii sui (quia factus erat Abbas) viam procixam ire deberet, oblitus est sui promissi, et equum cum suis famulis ascendens per silvam magnam perrexerunt, et cum eum omnes praecessissent, et solus esset, coepit cogitare, quod illo die laudes folitas B. Virgini non solvisset. Statim descendens de equo, consuetas orationes devote persolvit. Et cum sic statet in oratione, venit quidam latro post tergum volens eum occidere, et equum suum, et alias res auferre. Et cum a tergo eo ignorante, lanceam vibraret, vidit puerum pulcherrimum de ore ipsius quasi singulas rosas recipere, et inde crinale cum centum rosis compositum sibi puer imposuit. Quod videns latro, ad pedes ejus procidit, et veniam ab eo petiit, narrans omnem rei seriem, et totius facti integram veritatem. Factusque est bonus Monachus, et vitam bonam usque ad diem mortis suae laudabiliter, et feliciter consumavit, et in pace quievit. HEROLT, Promptuarium de Miraculis B. Mariae Virginis, No. 704. See WARNER, op. cit., No. XLV, p. XXVIII; WARD, Catalogue, p. 668; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 71. There is a German version which agrees with the Ethiopic in making the Virgin herself take the roses from the lips of Zacharias; see F. H. VON DER HAGEN, Gesammtabenteuer, vol. iii, p. 595.

VIII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BLIND GIRL (see page 50). According to the Ethiopic text Elisabeth, the daughter of Badramân and Gêrâ Anest, was cured of her blindness by a few drops of the Virgin's milk applied to her eyes. Several examples of cures effected by the Virgin's milk are mentioned in Books of Miracles, and among them may be noted the case of the monk who was cured of cancer in the lips; and of Fulbert, Bishop of Chartres, A.D. 1007—1029, who was visited on his sick-bed by the Virgin, and restored to health by three drops of her milk. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 637, Nos. 1 and 2.

IX. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE TWO BROTHERS WHO WERE SCRIBES (see page 55). The text of this miracle seems to be corrupt, and it is difficult to translate. We perhaps find its equivalent or parallel in the story of the Two Brothers of Rome, who were called Peter and Stephen. The former was sent to purgatory for avarice, and the letter was "damned for wrongs done against "St. Lawrence and St. Agnes"; Stephen was, however, rescued out of hell itself, and restored to life, for thirty days' penance. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 607; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 25.

X. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE LAME MAN (see page 62). The Ethiopic text speaks of a "man in a certain country of the Franks, who had a lame foot", and this at once proclaims the European source of the miracle. Jean Mielot (ed. WARNER, Miracles, No. LXV. p. XXXV) tells how a man who was suffering from "mal des ardents" had his foot amputated, in despair of cure; and how, after praying in the cathedral, he fell asleep, when his foot was restored to him whole by the Virgin, so that he walked away on his two feet. The "mal des ardents", or "feu sacré", seems to have been a disease of a cancerous nature which was of terrible virulence, and the ravages of which in the north of France in 1128 and 1129 are often described by writers of the time. The name of the city in which the miracle took place is given as Viviers; see WARD, Catalogue, p. 619. Another miracle mentions how Robert of Joüy was turned out of the Cathedral at Soissons because of the horrible smell of his putrefying foot, and how he was cured by the Virgin. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 727; and GAUTIER DE COINCY, Les Miracles de la Sainte Vierge (ed. POQUET, Paris, 1857), coll. 177—190.

XI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE BISHOP WHO WAS A LEPER (see page 64). As parallels of this miracle may be mentioned the case of the leprous woman at Soissons, and of the Cistercian monk who was afflicted with "rosea gutta" in his face, both of whom were cured by the Virgin Mary by wiping away the disease with her sleeve. See WARD, Catalogue, p. 630, No. 23; and p. 645, No. 8; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 26.

XII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND SOPHIA THE ABBESS OF MOUNT CARMEL (see page 68). This story of the abbess who was guilty of unchastity is found in many collections of Miracles of the Virgin Mary, and it seems to have been very popular. The Ethiopic text is characterized by several peculiarities, and for purposes of comparison the two oldest Latin versions of the story are here appended.

1. Fuit quaedam sanctimonialium, nomine et actione Abbatissa, strenue sancti

regiminis curam exequens, et spirituali zelo subjectam sibi congregationem ad sacri ordinis custodiam pro rigore constringens: sed quia bonorum profectus pravis animis livoris ingerit poenas, coeperunt ei Moniales pro bonis mala rependere: et pro impensa mirifici cura regiminis, odiorum studia exercere: sociavit quoque se livori earum insidiatoris antiqui semper infesta malignitas: nam ejus supplantata fraudibus, illa pia Mater cum Dapifero suo incesti crimen incurrit, et concepit: nec tamen destitit regulari rigore subjectum sibi gregem, ad observantiam ordinis coarctare, et inutiles vagandi licentias singulis denegare. Instante autem tempore partus, tam per incessum, quam per cibum a Monialium muliebri sagacitate impraegnata deprehenditur: resque singularum relatu in noticiam omnium perducitur: omnesque se in ea causam accusationis invenisse exultant, quam suis voluptatibus adversam iudicabant. Scribuntur literae accusatrices criminis deprehensi Episcopo, in cujus ille locus erat dioecesi. Imminebat, illa nesciente, Pontificis adventus, et ipsa onere suo, quod studiose celaverat, jam gravis sibimet quid ageret, ignorabat. Erat autem privata capella, ubi quotidiano usu solebat horas Beatae Virginis dulciori, quo poterat affectu, decantare, hanc ingrediens, laudes solitas devotissime persolvit. Finitis horis toto corde, et corpore se in oratione prosternens, precibus lachrymosis, ac profundis suspiriis, piissimam Dei genitricem Mariam obnixius orabat, ejus interventu, et reatus sui veniam obtinere, et horrenda opprobria imminentis sibi confusionis evadere. Inter hoc subitaneo depressa somno, in silentium commutatis clamoribus obdormivit, cui dormienti pia virgo duobus commitantibus Angelis apparuit, et moestam clementer alloquens, ait: Audivi orationem tuam, noveris me tibi a dulcissimo filio meo impetrasse, et peccati veniam, et a confusione quam times, liberationem plenissimam: tunc duobus Angelis astantibus: praecepit eam prolis onere, quo gravabatur, exonerare, et quidam eremitae in vicino posito deferre. Cui, et mandavit, ejus curam per septem annos gerere, quod et fecerunt. Denique Abbatissa evigilans, omni quo prius cruciabatur onere carere se sensit, et Deo, et liberatrici suae incessabiles gratias egit. Interim invitatus Antistes veniens, capitulum intravit, Abbatissam vocari fecit, quae ingressa, in loco sibi solito praesuli sedere festinavit, quam accedentem, Antistes opprobriis aggreditur, et injuriis fatigatam citius exire compellit, duos quoque clericos, qui divulgatum crimen explorent post eam mitti, qui accedentes, et attendentes, nullumque in ea signum uteri praegnantis deprehendentes, innocentiam ejus praesuli renunciant: sed illos

ipse pecuniis corruptos existimans, per semetipsum rei veritatem curiosus explorat, nullumque in ea criminis objecti signum inveniens, ad pedes ejus corruit, veniamque de illatis injuriis exposcit: omnibus, qui ei crimen injecerant, vehementer iratus praecepit, ut de monasterio citius exirent. Abbatissa vero eas licet malevolo animo, tamen vera dixisse perpendens: ad honorem liberatricis suae, maluit peccatum, quod fecerat, Episcopo revelare, quam criminatrices suas adversa pati permittere. Itaque coram eo se humiliter prosternit, eique omnem rei ordinem pandit. Miratur ille, et Deum in immensa gloriosae genetricis suae pietate benedicens, duos ex clericis ad eremitam pro causa pueri solicitus inquirenda transmittit: qui euntes, et de puero sciscitantes, edocti sunt ab homine puerum ea die natum, et a duobus iuvenibus ad eum paulo ante delatum, et ex parte Beatae Mariae sibi ab eis commendatum. Et revertentes, omnia Pontifici referunt. Laetus igitur, puerum, ut Mater Dei praeceperat, cum homine Dei septem annis nutriendum permisit, quem post in sui curam susceptum ad literas posuit, ac religione, et scientia clarum educavit. Ipso quoque tandem in Domino requiescente in Episcopatu ei successit, et Beatae Dei genetricis Mariae gloriam vita et verbis magnifice praedicavit. VINCENT DE BEAUVAIS, Spec. Hist., Lib. VII. cap. 86, p. 252.

2. Item aliud fidelium narracione comparatum est, quod quaedam abbatissa, beate Virgini devote serviens, sub arta custodia servabat sibi subditas moniales, licencias inutiles negans; ex qua causa eis est odio habita. Cum autem, eis procurantibus, esset impregnata et seducta, facti penitens et graviter dolens, non cessabat eas arte custodire et beatam Virginem rogare. Appropinquante partu et utero intumescente, accusatur episcopo suo, qui descendit ad factum inquirendum. Cum autem in mane esset facienda inquisicio, tota nocte se contulit ad rogandam beatam Virginem, facta prius cum lacrimis confessione. Apparuit ei dormienti beata Virgo, dicens ejus preces a filio suo exauditas pro venia obtinenda et confusione vitanda, et dixit duobus angelis, qui eam comitabantur, ut eam liberarent ab onere pueri et eum cuidam incluso vicino deportarent alendum ex parte ipsius, monens eam ut de cetero sibi caveret et invigilaret in custodia suî et suarum. Que evigilans invenit se ab omni onere et dolore liberatam. In mane in capitulo accusatur: negat se esse pregnantem; inquiritur: invenitur vacua et sana et integra; quod noscens episcopus, prostravit se ad pedes ejus, veniam petens pro illatis injuriis et conviciis et imposito crimine, volens de abbacia emittere omnes qui eam infamaverant. Illa autem hoc non ferens, apertam episcopo veritatem fatetur, et invenit per inclusum quod duo juvenes ei puerum deportaverant ex parte beate Marie alendum usque ad septennium. Episcopus autem, pueri curam agens, instrui eum fecit et imbui litteris et moribus, et cum instructum reliquit suî in episcopatu successorem et egregium beate Marie predicatorem. II. p. 314; for an old English version see SMALL, English Metrical Homilies, 1862, p. 164; and compare WARD, Catalogue, p. 626; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 29.

XIII. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE THIEF (see page 85). The story given in the Ethiopic text is clearly a version of the well-known legend of Ebbo, or Elbo, the thief who was sustained on the gallows for two days by the Virgin Mary. A common Latin version[1] is as follows:— Fuit latro quidam nomine Elbo; cum multociens res alienas raperet, unde et suos miserrime pasceret, sanctam Dei genitricem venerabatur ex corde, et etiam dum ad latrocinamdum pergeret, exorando eam devotissime salutabat. Cum ergo quadam vice ad latrocinandum pergeret, exorando ipsam, deprehenditur atque sine ulla miseratione suspenditur. Cumque elevatus de terra perbidium penderet, ecce in illo iduo beata Virgo suis manibus ipsum vivum et illaesum sustentavit. Illi vero qui illum suspenderant, cum ad ipsum redissent, et eum vultu hilari nihil mali patientem vidissent, dum guttur ejus transfigere volent, beata Virgo non permisit, sed manus suas gutturi anteposuit. Cognoscentes igitur illi quod gloriosa Virgo auxiliaretur ei, valde miriati dimiserunt eum. Qui abiens, factus est monachus, atque Deo et gloriosae ejus genetrici servivit devotissime omnibus diebus vitae suae. See WRIGHT, Latin Stories, No. CIX. p. 98.

The narrative of ÉTIENNE DE BOURBON (ed. Lecoy de la Marche, p. 103) is shorter, and contains variations; it reads:— Item legitur quod quidam fur habebat boni quod vigilias beate Marie in pane et aqua jejunabat, et, cum iret furari, semper

Ave, Maria dicebat, rogans eam ne dimitteret eum mori in peccato illo. Cum autem captus suspenderetur, per triduum pependit, nec potuit mori. Cum autem vocaret transeuntes ut advocarent ei sacerdotem, adveniente eo et præposito cum aliis, removetur a patibulo, dicens quod virgo pulcherrima sustentaverat eum per pedes per triduum; promittens emendacionem, liber dimittitur. Still another Latin version is found in the Legenda Aurea (ed. GRAESSE, Cap. CXXXI. No. 5, p. 592), which reads:— Erat quidam fur, qui saepe latrocinia exercebat, sed beatam Mariam plurimum in devotione habebat et eam crebrius salutabat. Quadam igitur vice fur quaedam rapiens capitur et suspendio adjudicatur. Cum autem suspenderetur, continuo beata virgo ei affuit et suspensum tribus diebus, ut sibi videbatur, suis manibus sustentavit ita, quod nullam laesionem persensit. Illi vero, qui eum suspenderunt, casu inde transeuntes cum viventem et vultu hilari repererunt et arbitrantes, quod non bene fuisset laqueo adstrictus, gladio ipsum jugulare volebant, sed beata Maria ferentium gladio manum opponebat et illi sibi nil nocere poterant. Cognoscentes ergo referente illo, quod beata Maria sic eum juvabat, mirantes eum deposuerunt et amore virginis abire liberum dimiserunt. Qui abiens monasterium intravit et, quoad vixit, in servitio Dei genitricis permansit. See also WARD, Catalogue, p. 606; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 24.

XIV. THE VIRGIN MARY AND PHILEMON, THE SON OF EUPHEMIA, WHO BECAME A ROBBER (see page 88). A Latin version of this story will be found in the Legenda Aurea (ed. GRAESSE, Cap. CXXXI. No. 4, p. 591), but in it the mother is made to go to the church, to seize the Virgin's Child, and to carry Him home and lock Him up, having wrapped Him in a clean linen cloth, as a hostage for the safety of her son. To the Virgin the distracted mother says, "Igitur, sicut filius "meus mihi ablatus est, sic et ego filium tuum tibi auferam et obsidem pro filio "meo in custodiam ponam". Thus saying, Propius accessit et imaginem pueri, quam virgo in gremio bajulabat, auferens domum abiit accipiensque imaginem pueri ipsam in linteo mundissimo involvit et in archa recondens ipsam cum clave diligentius obfirmavit, bonum obsidem pro filio suo habere gaudens et ipsum diligenter custodiens. Et ecce sequenti nocte beata virgo juveni apparuit et januam carceris aperiens, inde ut exeat, praecepit eique dixit: matri tuae, fili dices, ut meum reddat filium, ex quo reddidi sibi suum. Qui exiens ad matrem venit et, qualiter beata virgo eum liberaverit, enarravit. Illa autem plurimum exsultans imaginem

pueri accepit et ad ecclesiam vadens beatae Mariae reddidit filium dicens: gratias vobis, domina, refero, quia mihi meum unicum filium reddidistis, et nunc vobis filium vestrum reddo, quia meum me recepisse profiteor.

I. In loco qui dicitur Tumba est Ecclesia sancti Michaelis Archangeli honorifice constructa, qui locus oceano cinctus, ipsius aestu terribilis est propter accessum et recessum maris advenientibus omnibus: et limina sancti Michaelis Archangeli petere desiderantibus, bis in die sinum praetendit, non autem ut caetera maria gradatim, verum praecipiti cursu, ac terrifico sonitu accurrens saepe intercepit iter agentes. Quadam igitur festivitate ipsius Archangeli, turbis ad ejus limina properantibus, ecce jam in medio arenae positis (erat autem inter eos mulier quaedam paupercula vicino portu omnino jam gravida) sonitus terribilis maris subito intonuit, et cunctis praepeti cursu amentium more fugientibus, illa mulier sola remansit: usu etiam pedum prae nimio dolore, et terrore, atque labore destituta (irruerant enim in eam dolores subiti), clamabat cum eiulatu, miserabiliter auxilium petens, sed unusquisque seipsum tueri cupiens, audire dissimulabat. Igitur humano deficiente auxilio, recurrit ad divinum: Deum lachrymabili voce invocans, et ejus genitricem Mariam, sanctumque Archangelum Michaelem. Populus quoque omnis ad hoc spectaculum consistens manus ad sidera tendens, Dei et Matris ejus auxilium flebiliter invocabat. Universis ergo Christi auxilium implorantibus advenit pia Dei genetrix, et ut ipsi mulieri videbatur, manica super eam projecta: ita intactam a terrisono impetu maris reddidit, ut nec minima etiam gutta totius abyssi vestimenta illius contigeret. Ibi vero quasi in tutissimo habitaculo posita, filium peperit, sine timore ullo permanens, donec iterum mare fluctus suos in se retrahens liberum iter eundi mulieri praeberet. Itaque cum puero ad littus venit, et quae sola in mari relicta erat, exiens jam non sola, miraculi spectaculum omni populo praebuit. See VINCENT DE BEAUVAIS, Spec. Hist., Lib. VII. Cap. 84, p. 252; and HEROLT, Promptuarium, p. 854.

II. Cum in festo Sancti Michaelis, ubi mare fluit et refluit bis in die, multi convenirent undique ad ecclesiam Beati Michaelis de Tumba, et quedam mulier vicina partui cum aliis ibi veniret, cum alii, audientes et videntes fluctum venientem, fugerent ut effugerent, dicta mulier, timore percussa, irruentibus in eam doloribus partus, cum invocaret beatam Virginem voce flebili, et illi qui erant in littore orarent pro ea, non valentes subvenire, affuit ei beata Virgo, manica sua ab ea undas maris et fluctus longe abigens, ita quod nec eam nec vestes ejus tangeret gutta aque. Que illesa, cum filio quem peperit, ad littus recipitur, omnibus astantibus gracias ei referentibus, qui eam sub mari illesam conservavit. See ETIENNE DE BOURBON (ed. LECOY DE LA MARCHE), Anecdotes Historiques, p. 99.

XVI. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE DRUNKEN MONK (see page 136). This story is well-known, and copies of it are found in many manuscripts; see WARD, Catalogue, p. 612; and MUSSAFIA, Marienlegenden, Heft I. p. 27. HEROLT's Latin version (Fromptuarium, p. 856) is as follows:— Maria Virgo quemdam Monachum sibi devotum a diabolo liberavit, et etiam a consuetudine inebriandi revocavit: Unde legitur, quod cum quidam Monachus devotus Beatae Virginis Mariae cellarium Abbatiae intrasset, forti vino adeo se ingurgitavit, quod factus est quasi sine sensu. Ubi cum mansisset, post paululum a vino excitatus tentabat ire ad Ecclesiam per claustrum, occurrit ei diabolus in specie tauri maximi, volens ipsum cornibus transfodere. Tunc affuit ei quaedam Virgo speciosissima, diffusa caesarie super humeros suos, tenens in dextera ejus mappulam lineam, et increpans diabolum, et jubens eum a familia Dei discedere, statim utraque visio disparuit. Cum autem idem Monachus inceptum perageret iter, et Ecclesiae appropinquaret, affuit diabolus in specie canis horribilis, et ex impetu in eum exiliens, affuit et praedicta puella eum abire compellens, et eum iterum libertum faciens, et sic visio disparuit, et Ecclesiam intranti affuit diabolus in specie leonis immanissimi rugiens, et in eum impetum faciens, quasi eum devoraturus: sed apparuit statim Beata Virgo virgam in manu tenens contra diabolum, et comminans ei alia acriora supplicia sustinere, qui statim ut fumus disparuit. Puella autem praedictum Monachum per manum accipiens, fecit eum statim mente sanum ac sobrium, ac si nihil bibisset, et ad lectum suum reclinans, ei signum Crucis in fronte ejus imprimens, et monens, ne de caetero talia facere praesumetur, sed in mane peccatum suum confiteretur tali Monacho familiari suo, et quicquid imponeret adimpleret. Cum autem Monachus quaereret,

XVII. The Virgin Mary and Nicodemus (see page 137). This story as given in the Ethiopic text agrees substantially with the versions which are known to exist in Latin (Legenda Aurea, ed. Graesse, cap. LI. No. 4, p. 221), French (see Warner, Miracles, No. VII. p. x), and English (see Small, English Metrical Homilies, p. 160). According to one narrator the monk was a "Chancelier de Chartres", and according to another he was a wealthy knight who became a monk of Cîteaux; see Ward, Catalogue, p. 605; and Jehan Le Marchant (ed. Duplessis), Miracles de Notre-Dame de Chartres, Chartres, 1855, p. 184. The Latin version reads:—

Miles quidam dives ac nobilis saeculo abrenuntiavit et ordinem Cisterciensium introivit et quia litteras nesciebat, erubescentes monachi tam nobilem personam inter laicos deputari dederunt ei magistrum, si forte modicum addiscere posset et sub hac occasione inter monachos permaneret. Sed cum diu cum magistro fuisset et nihil omnino praeter haec duo vocabula: ave Maria, discere potuisset, haec tam avide retinuit, ut quocumque deambularet, quidquid ageret, ea incessanter ruminaret. Tandem moritur et in cimiterio cum aliis fratribus sepelitur, et ecce super ejus tumulum speciosum excrescit lilium et quodlibet folium: ave Maria litteris aureis habebat inscriptum. Currentes omnes ad tam grande spectaculum terram de tumulo effoderunt et radicem lilii de ore defuncto procedere repererunt. Intellexerunt ergo, quanta devotione illa duo verba dixerat, quem dominus tanti honore prodigii illustravit.

From the facts set forth above it is quite clear that a large proportion of the Ethiopian Miracles of the Virgin Mary printed in this volume are derived from Western sources, and a comparison of the Latin versions with the Ethiopic texts will shew that, as a whole, the general sense of the narratives has been well preserved. Proper names have suffered at the hands of the Arabic and Ethiopian translators, but this, after all, is only what is to be expected.

Among the selection of miracles here given are many which have no special characteristics, and which might as well have been written in the south of Europe as in Western Asia, or in North-east Africa, and for these numerous parallels might be found. Miracles in which the Virgin Mary gives food and clothing to the poor, both clergy and laity, or heals the sick, or mends a broken bone, or restores sight to the blind, or sets a prisoner free, or appears to the dying and supports and comforts them, are common in all Christian countries, and the only things in connexion with them which vary are the time, place, and circumstances. In the Collection before us, however, are a number which can hardly have been written anywhere outside Egypt or Ethiopia, or Syria. Thus the story of the two women who were robbed of their food on their way to Jerusalem (see page 39) is consistent with what is known of the condition of Syria in early times; the story of the Khalîfa of Athribis and the monk (see page 96) is Egyptian in every particular; the story of the Cannibal of Kemer (see page 83) is one which could only be written, at least in its present form, in a barbarous country, bordering on the Sûdân; and the story of the two dyers (see page 60) is such a true picture of Muḥammadan trickery that it can hardly have been written in Europe. The story of the wounded Greek (see page 48) is one of considerable interest, for it introduces the use of a magical figure made of wax. It seems that a Greek was wounded in the eye by an arrow, and that because his friends could not carry him to the shrine of the Virgin, they carried a wax figure in his stead. The wax figure was, of course, made to resemble the Greek, and a dart was stuck in one eye; the Virgin drew the dart from the eye of the wax figure, and immediately the eye of the Greek, who was some considerable distance away, became sound and well. The story of the Monk and his skull-cap (see page 75) is of course the product of some monastery; but it is hard to account for that of the Virgin and the thirsty dog (see page 95). In the story of the Virgin Mary and the three Arabs (see page 40) we have, probably, a reminiscence of the stories in which the Virgin appears to those who are in danger on the sea[1], and brings them safely to land. For the story of the removal of a monastery from its old site to that of the bank of a stream[2] (see page 44), and that of the three poor sisters (see page 52), I have been able to find neither parallel nor equivalent.

[2] The reader should note that the word Jericho is a mistranslation for "stream", or "river", (the Ethiopic ጅፈፅ: = the Syriac ܢܗܪܐ), and for "Jericho" should read "stream" everywhere in the miracle.

An examination of the group of Ethiopic miracles of the Virgin Mary here given proves that the examples were chosen unsystematically, and that the chief object of the scribe was to put before the reader a selection which would fairly well illustrate all the principal varieties of miracles. The moral tone of all the miracles save one is very high, and their contents appeal to the best instincts and emotions of men and women; but it is as hard to see what useful purpose is served by repeating the story of the Unchaste Abbess of Mount Carmel (see page 68), as it is to understand how the scandalous story of the Provost of Aqualeia[1] and the Monk could ever have been incorporated into a collection of miracles. The editor of the group would probably quiet his scruples by thinking that narratives of human depravity which also displayed the saving power of God, and His longsuffering towards the erring, could not be out of place in works of the kind. The matter of the credibility of the miracles is one which need not concern us, for the measure of acceptance given to them must always have depended upon the education and constitution of the readers. It is interesting to note that most of the miracles, of which versions can be found in Latin and other texts, are of very respectable antiquity, and that in some cases they are as old as the VIIth or VIIIth century. An excellent example of this class is the story of the alb which the Virgin gave to one of her chosen followers. According to one version the recipient was Saint Bonet, Bishop of Auvergne, A.D. 689—699, but according to another it was Hildefonsus of Toledo[2], who died A.D. 783.

Throughout the Miracles the Virgin Mary is called the "two-fold Virgin", but nowhere in them is the title explained. It may be that the Ethiopians attributed to Mary a two-fold nature, one human and one divine, and that they, in consequence, ascribed to her a two-fold virginity. Or the appellation may refer to her own virginity and to that of her mother, who conceived her immaculately. At the end of most of the miracle a five-lined verse of poetry is added in which reference is made to the exalted character of the descent of the Virgin Mary, and a prayer is added on behalf of the man or woman who paid the scribe to copy the book. These verses are substantially the same in all manuscripts, and thus it is clear that at an early period they became an integral portion of collections of miracles. Among the epithets applied to the Virgin are, "Book of the Law and Covenant", the "Shining East", "Morning", "Sweet-tasting vine-cluster", "Life of the sick", Fountain of help", "Bloom of every flower", "Queen of heaven", "Sanctuary of the Law", "Evangelist", "Abode of the Paraclete", "Ark of God", "Pearl", "Flower of Ḥ annâ", "Covenant of God", "Covenant of mercy", "Shining bow in the cloud", "Zion of God", "Ark of the Law", "Pillar of cloud", "Ark and Two Tables of stone of the New Covenant", etc.

Of the miscellaneous compositions added in the Lady Meux MSS. Nos. 2 and 3 the vision of Archbishop Theophilus, or Philotheus (see page 114), is the most noteworthy. In it the Virgin appears to the Archbishop in the church at Ḳučsḳuâm and relates to him a tolerably full account of the birth of Christ, and of her wanderings through Egypt with the Child. This apocryphal work is one of many which are attributed to Theophilus, and it is interesting because it contains a number of details of the Infancy which are not to be found in the ordinary Apocryphal Gospels. It appears to have been written several centuries after the greater number of the miracles here given, and to have been intended to supply pious but credulous readers with stories about events in the life of Christ which were of a devotional rather than historical character. The Ethiopic text seems to have been made from an Arabic version, which was probably not older than the XIIth century. The two versions of the "Transitus" or "Assumption of the Virgin" (see pp. 15, 145) also seem to have been translated from the Arabic, and in many details they resemble the Syriac version[1]. The "Covenant of Christ with the Virgin" (see page 19), and the narrative of the five sorrows of Mary are attributed to Dexius, who may be identified with Bishop Bonet or Hildefonsus, and may be early works. The Latin version printed by HEROLT (Promptuarium, p. 860) is useful for purposes of comparison, and I append it here. It reads:— Quidam sanctus Pater in spiritu audivit Jesum Christum quaerentem a Matre misericordiae: qui fuissent dolores sui majores in mundo? Et illa: quinque fuerunt majores caeteris. Primus cum Simeon te occidendum prophetavit: Secundus fuit, cum te perdidi per triduum: Tertius, cum te ligatum audivi: Quartus, cum te Crucifixum vidi: Quintus, cum te vidi poni in sepulchro. Cui Christus ait: Qui me ad primum tuum dolorem cum uno Pater noster et Ave, Maria salutaverit, dabo ei cognitionem, et contributionem peccatorum. Si ad secundum idem fecerit, dabo ei remissionem omnium peccatorum. Si ad tertium idem fecerit, virtutes quas per peccatum perdidit, dabo. Et ad quartum dabo ei donum gratiae, et cibabo eum ante mortem Corpore meo. Si ad quintum, apparebo eo in monte, et recipiam eum in vitam aeternam.

THE HISTORY OF HANNÂ, THE MOTHER OF THE VIRGIN MARY.

The manuscript which contains this remarkable work is, apparently, unique, and is of considerable interest both artistically and linguistically. The work itself is of an unusual character, and its origin is difficult to trace. Much of the information contained in it is derived from the well-known Apocryphal Gospels which deal with the birth and history of the Virgin and Child, but there is much in it which is peculiar to itself. The composition is divided into seven sections, which were intended to be read one each day for a week, but no directions are given as to the week which is to be chosen for the purpose. The first section[1] mentions the parentage of Ḥannâ, or Saint Anne, who was of noble birth, and whose mother's name was Faustina[2], and describes her good works; she fed and clothed the poor, and made garments of byssus and purple for her husband. In it we are told that the Virgin Mary was the offspring of the union of the seed which had been deposited in Adam when he was created by God, and had passed from body to body until it entered into that of Joachim, and of the spirit of life, which descended from heaven in the form of a white bird, and took up its abode in the body of Ḥannâ. In the second section Ḥannâ is declared to be more highly esteemed than precious stones, and her joy at the birth of Mary is described; her answers to the Jews, who treated Ḥannâ with contempt, are also given, and in a final paragraph her last illness and her death, which took place on November 7, are mentioned. In the third section we find an encomium on Ḥannâ, and a description of the grief of the Virgin Mary. In the fourth section are a hymn of praise to Ḥannâ and an account of her genealogy. According to this her father was called Mâṭâṭ, and was the son of Levi, the son of Mêlkâ, of the tribe of Judah. He had three daughters, who were called Mary, Sophia, and Ḥannâ, and these married and became the mothers of Salome, who was with the Virgin at the birth of Christ, Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist, and the Lady Mary respectively. These statements are followed by a version of the story of Hannâ's barrenness which seems to be based on the Protevangelium of James. In the fifth section we find an allusion to the five and a half days mentioned in the Book of Adam and Eve, a short account of the childhood of Mary, and the narrative of the vision of a certain holy man who saw Joachim and Hannâ standing before the throne of God, and entreating Him to shew mercy unto those who should celebrate their festival upon earth. In the sixth section the writer discusses the birth of the Virgin Mary once more, and in the seventh section and its preface are beatifications of Joachim and Ḥannâ, a miracle of Ḥannâ, a series of Salutations (Aves) to Ḥannâ, a miracle of Ḥannâ, and a miracle of Christ. Throughout the work Ḥannâ is assumed to have married once only, and to have had only one child — the Virgin Mary.[1]

[1] According to some writers Mary was born when Ḥannâ was thirty-six years old and Joachim forty-five years old; after the death of Joachim she married Cleophas, and after the death of Cleophas she married Salome. The whole subject is discussed in the Acta SS. for July, tom. VI., p. 216ff.

MAGICAL PRAYERS.

The Magical Prayers translated in the following pages belong to a class of Ethiopian literature of which little has been published, and they illustrate an interesting phase in the history of Christian religious belief in Ethiopia. They are written upon long, narrow strips of parchment sewn together, and were rolled up tightly and fastened by a parchment string to some part of the body, usually the arm or the neck; the greasy condition of many of them proves that they were worn next to the skin. A few were placed in skin or metal cases which were worn outside the dress as ornaments; sometimes the cases were fastened up, the amulet being thus placed out of the reach of the wearer, and sometimes they were left open so that he or she might take out the parchment and read from it when in trouble or difficulty. The Ethiopians, in common with all Eastern nations, always attached great importance to the possession of amulets, and they believed that devils and fiends were powerless to harm them as long as they wore them on their persons; their acceptance of Christianity in the early centuries of our era in nowise affected this belief. Outwardly they became Christians, and they built churches, and read the Christian Scriptures, and adopted Christian ceremonies and institutions, and proclaimed Christ to be the Son of God. Inwardly, however, they retained their belief in the power of evil spirits, and they never succeeded in freeing themselves from the fear of the attacks which the demons of the mountains, and the deserts, and the forests, and the earth, and the sea, and the sky, were able to make upon them. Only in one way could they successfully resist them, and that was by making devil fight against devil, and fiend against fiend. To resist one devil a man must obtain the protection of another who had greater power; and to control or to avoid the attacks of a legion of devils, he must obtain influence with their prince. Such influence could best be obtained by knowing the names of the princes of darkness, and to such knowledge great importance was attached. The Ethiopians also believed that if a man's name perished he could have neither lot nor portion in the world to come; hence all amulets contain the names of men and women who sought to place themselves under the protection of supernatural beings. A man must be, so to speak, introduced by name to the invisible power or powers whose help and protection he sought, and for any petition to such to be effectual it must contain the name of the power or powers. Before the advent of Christianity in Ethiopia it was believed that human beings could compel supernatural beings or powers to do what they willed by addressing them by their names, but when the Ethiopians adopted Christianity this view became modified somewhat, and they sought to control the powers of darkness by means of the names of the Jewish Archangels and Angels, which they believed to be of greater might than those of their native demons and spirits. In the one case they sought to threaten or coax the demons because they knew their names, in the other they attempted to vanquish them by the knowledge of names of greater power. And demons of inferior power avoided any place where the name of any being of greater power was either mentioned or written, as we see from the story of the demon Ursula and Sûsenyôs who swore by the Archangels that she would never enter the church wherein the name of Socinius was being commemorated, or approach any place where it was to be found. In fact wherever the name of a good or evil spirit, or of a man existed, there also was the presence of that spirit or man; in this aspect the presence of the name of any being was equivalent to the presence of the being.

When God wished to give Solomon, the great magician of antiquity, power over the "children of Kedar", who are said to have been "workers in metal", and cannibals, and eaters of filth, He gave him a number of His own names whereby to adjure them. With these names Solomon destroyed their power, and because he was able to do so the Ethiopians thought that they also could protect themselves against the "children of Kedar" by the same means. It is worthy of note in passing that the knowledge of working in metals has at various periods of the world's history been associated with magical powers, for ignorant people in many countries have believed that metal could only be made to melt by the agency of devils. Ethiopian amulets contain large numbers of magical names, many of which can be traced to Bible sources, but many are clearly corruptions of names and are no longer recognizable. These names are usually arranged in groups of three or more, and many have to be repeated three, four, or seven times. The number three has, probably, reference to the Persons of the Trinity, the number four to the four cardinal points, or divisions of the earth, and the number seven to the seven souls of man. Magical prayers are usually directed against the influence of the evil spirits which were, and are, believed to cause sickness and disease, and although it is not possible to identify all the diseases enumerated it is clear that they are those which are commonly met with in Egypt, Ethiopia, and North-East Africa to this day. Skin diseases caused by dirt and want of sufficient and proper nourishment, internal diseases caused by drinking polluted water and eating insufficiently cooked food, fever of various kinds, ague, rheumatism, cholera, epilepsy, ophthalmia, worms, fistula, and diseases of the pulmonary organs are among the most common afflictions met with, and women always pray fervently against miscarriage and barrenness.

It is not clear by what means hostile supernatural beings were believed to effect their sinister ends in human beings, but it seems that they did so by merely looking upon the man, woman, or child who came in their way. Each sickness or disease was personified, and given a name, and the Ethiopian seems to have thought that when he was suffering from any ailment his pains arose from the actual presence of the personification of the disease in his body. To prevent the entrance of any such into his body was his chief aim and care, and he spared no pains in avoiding places where the demons of sickness were supposed to dwell. Mountains, deserts, woods, forests, caves, holes in the ground, ruins, old houses, and the like were supposed to be the favourite haunts of demons, and special care was thought to be necessary in latrines. In these last demons were thought to lurk waiting their opportunity to pass into the uncovered bodies of those who came there. When once a demon had entered the body he could only be expelled by means of the name, or presence, of a being of greater power. Magical names were thought to be efficacious in warding off the attacks of wild animals and reptiles, for these creatures were also held to be personifications of demons of evil. But besides demons and wild animals the magical powers of the people of certain nations had to be guarded against, and as a result we find in amulets prayers which are directed against the sorceries and spells of the Indians, Egyptians, Arabs, Greeks, Ethiopians, etc. In short, the world, according to the Ethiopian's ideas, must have been filled with hostile beings, both material and immaterial, who were ever on the watch to do him an injury.

first describes the conversation between Solomon and the children of Kedar, and contains a prayer directed against the sword, dagger, epilepsy and kindred diseases, wild animals and reptiles, and the spells of sorcerers of different nations. The second contains a prayer against the "spell of the bear and of noxious beasts", and the spells of the magicians and sorcerers who work evil by means of the juices of certain plants and instruments of various kinds. The third contains a prayer against the lion, panther, hyaena, and wolf, and refers to the four beasts which support the throne of God. The fourth contains a prayer against liars, slanderers, calumniators, and enemies of every kind, and those who would oppose the owner of the amulet in judgment. The fifth contains a prayer against terror or fright of every kind, and refers to the "seventy-seven lamps which were given to Enoch"; and the sixth declares that the man who wears this amulet on his breast shall be delivered from the spear of any who would attack him.

The amulet written for Sebḥat Le'ab contains nine sections. In the first reference is made to Enoch and Elijah; in the second the three and a half years' famine which Elijah brought upon the earth is mentioned; and in the third Nabal, the fool, who opposed David, and Uzza, who dared to look into the ark, are alluded to. The owner of the amulet prays that as God worked for the Patriarchs, and delivered them, even so He will deliver him from out of his troubles. The fourth section is a prayer directed against wounding by "spear, sword, bow, naphtha, stick, or stone". The fifth section records the magical names which God gave to Moses, and contains a prayer that He will cause the owner of the amulet to find favour in the sight of kings and governors, and that his words may be sweet like honey and sugar, and [savoury like] salt. The sixth section is a prayer directed against words of calumny, and the seventh is a prayer that the owner of the amulet may be delivered from Bâryâ and Bûdâ, the princes of sorcerers and of those who work magic, by the might of the piercing Word of God, and by the sharp sword of Michael, and by the names of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The eighth section contains a remarkable list of magical names, and the ninth is a concluding prayer for deliverance from the disease caused by worms, and a fourfold address to a being called Nâzer.

The amulet written for Shalâsê Tezâzû introduces us to an entirely different class of magical prayers, and the text may probably be more correctly described as a litany. It begins by mentioning the Names of the Three Persons of the Trinity, and then describes what follows as a prayer against the tongue of Bâryâ, and against the "tongues of men, both of those who are kinsfolk and those who are strangers", and against fever, rheumatism, and other diseases. The addresses are made to Christ under the name of Tamâ, and a number of events in His life are enumerated, such as His proceeding from the Father, His existence before all worlds, His two-fold birth, His flight to Dabra Ḳuĕsḳuâm near Thebes, His circumcision, His appearance in the Temple, His living in the house of Joseph for thirty years, His baptism, fasting, and temptation, His weeping at the grave of Lazarus, His humility, His Body and Blood, His priesthood, His buffeting, scourging, and crown of thorns, His sweat, His trial before Caiaphas and Pontius Pilate, His agony, cross, and crucifixion, His bearing of the cross, His pierced hands and feet, His mouth which drank wormwood and gall, His death, His descent into the place whereunto the "souls of Adam and Abel went down", His dead body, His grave, and His Resurrection. The amulet concludes with a prayer for deliverance from "the tongue of kinsfolk and of strangers".

TRANSLATIONS.

I. The Magical Prayers which were written for Za-Walda Ḥawâryât[1] and Tasfâ Mâryâm are found in a manuscript in the possession of the Rev. R. W. Fawkes. This document consists of three narrow strips of parchment measuring together 6 ft. 2 in. by 3½ in. The handwriting is bold and usually fairly good, and the manuscript probably belongs to the first half of the XVIIIth century. At the top is a Coptic cross, the arms of which are ornamented with scroll work; in the middle is a rectangular design which is divided into nine sections and enclosed within borders; at the end, which tapers somewhat, are two crosses with human eyes. All four ornaments are painted in red, yellow, and black. The texts read:—

1. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. [These are] the Names of our God (or Lord) which will deliver [a man, or the wearer of the roll] from the sword, and from the knife (or razor) which is brighter than the lightning(?). [These are] the Name of God and the hidden Names which He spake unto Solomon concerning the 'Aḳuĕyâsât and the children of Ḳĕdâr, who are workers in metal, and He declared them unto him so that he might bind them in fetters and carry them off. And by means of the three names he bound them in fetters, and destroyed their power, and brought them low. Then Solomon said unto them, "Declare ye unto me [the source of] your power, and "by what means ye devour the flesh of men, and draw the soul out [from the "body], and paralyse the hearts of men, and change a soul from one form into "another; tell me, I pray you, what are the magical arts [whereby] ye [do these "things?]" And they said unto him, "We have no magical arts whatsoever". Then Solomon said [unto them], "By Dayâbâwî, and by Nabalbâlâwî, and by Mabraḳ "Dâdâ, and by Ḳĕrbĕdâdâ, the hidden Names of God, declare ye unto me what "are your magical arts, and what is your power, and by what means ye devour "the flesh of men, and by what means ye drink the blood of the 'Aḳuĕyâsât and "of the children of Ḳĕdâr who are workers in metal and eaters of filth." [And they said unto him, "We have no magical arts whatsoever]". Then Solomon spake unto them, and poured out curses upon them, saying, "By Darḳâs, and by "Zarḳâ[s], and by Daḳâs, and by Admâs, the [hidden] Names of God, shall ye be "accursed, and your power shall be destroyed. And by 'Êêfḥam His Name, and by "'Alfâhamsa, and by Lêḳâs, and by B'alfâs Za'aênâwôs, His hidden Names, shall "ye be accursed." And by Yôsẓâ, and by 'Alfâzâ, and by Hêzâ, and this Thy Name, he bound in fetters the 'Aḳuĕyâsât who devour human flesh without first slaying [the men]. Now at that time, which was the seventh, the 'Aḳuĕyâsât held converse with Solomon, and they said unto him, "We devour human flesh "without first killing [the men], and we drink [their] blood without [pouring it into] "a cup, and we drive out unborn children from women, for we are able to look "inside their wombs, and we make men and women to appear in other forms, "and we stir up enmity between man and wife." Thus did they speak unto Solomon at that time. Then Solomon said, "Deliver me, O Lord, from infirmities, "and from every thing [like unto them], and from epilepsy and from the diseases "which are like unto them, and from wrath and anger, and from what resembleth "them; and from the hyaena, and from the panther, and from the tiger, and from "the dragon, and from the serpent, and from snakes, and from the scorpion, and "from scorpions, and from creatures which are like unto them; and from saḥaḳ, "and ḳaḥar, and from what resembleth them. Let the heavens look upon them [in anger], and the earth spurn them, and the ark smite them, and the dust scatter "them, for what they do by magical arts, and let the earth quake and swallow "up those who make themselves masters of their sorceries". O loose the spell of the man of Guôndar and Lastâ. O loose the spell of the Amḫarâ and Wagrâ. O loose the spell of Dâmô and Dâmôt. O loose the spell of Ararâ and Wayrât. O loose the spell of Dâba'â and Ṣagû'â. O loose the spell of Manbaratâ and Gar'altâ. O loose the spell of Henṭâlô and Ṣalâlô. O loose the spell from Thy servant Za-Walda Ḥawâryât! [Here follows the rectangular design enclosed within borders].

2. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. O loose the spell of the bear and of the noxious beast. O loose the spell of the Gâla, and the Negro, and the Bălăwă and the 'Agăwă. O loose the spell of the Xîrê and Tegre. O loose the spell of Ḳuĕhyan and Walḳâyat. O loose the spell of Dâbtarâ and Faḳûrâ. O loose the spell of 'Aṣbî and Xîn'apê. O loose the spell of Xîrkûxa. O loose the spell of Gôrabît (or Sârabît). O loose the spell of 'Agamê and 'Agû'ĕda. O loose the spell of Harâmât and Warâhôt. O loose the spell of 'Ĕglâ and Yabân. O loose the spell of Gûlâmâkâd. O loose the spell of Sara'ê and Sam'â. O loose the spell of Sarâvê and Ḥamâxên. O loose the spell of India and Kêtânyâ (or Bêtânyâ). O loose the spell of Ethiopia and Malakî. O loose the spell of the sorcerer and sorceress and the [doer of their] work. O loose the spell of Afraje and Sĕryâ. O loose the spell of the Arab, and Egyptian, and Greek. O loose the spell of the devils and fiends. O loose the spell of the Ḥasîrân and the Nawiḥân. O loose the spell of the Ṣâlîmân (i. e., the black) and the Ḥawîhan. O loose the spells of all those who perform cures, and the spells of every kind which are cast by means of the plants maṣleḳuat, and 'ar'ar, and ṭĕḳûr kalb, and ṭĕḳûr xinbarâ, and ṭĕḳûr gabas, and the spells of those who work magic by means of instruments of various kinds outside and inside, and let not healing be performed by means of any of these things upon Thine handmaiden, Tasfâ Mâryâm.

3. In [the Name of] God the Father. Fire! In [the Name of] God the Son. Fire! In [the Name of] God the Holy Ghost. Fire! I have sealed you, and I have bound you, O lion, and panther, and hyaena, and wolf, and jackal, and vulture, both openly and in secret. O 'Adnâêl! O 'Aûdûêl! O invisible throne of God, the Most High! O Strength of the four and twenty priests of heaven! O ye four beasts which bear up His throne..... the throne of the Most High, ye [four beasts] who bear up the throne of the Most High upon their bodies, one having the face of a lion, and another the face of an eagle, and another the face of a man, and another the face of an ox! By these names I.. you that ye neither devour, nor bite, nor rend the possessions of your servants Za-Walda Ḥawâryât and Tasfâ Mâryâm, by the command of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. [Here follows the design of a cross with human eyes].

4. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, One God. The [above] names shall enable a man to guard himself against evil men, and liars, and calumniators, and men of wrath, and the hand of him that would attack him, and the feet of those who would rush upon him by means of magical powers. Let not those who would speak against this man words of hostility, or words of magical power, or those who would beat him with a rod, and with bitter words, draw nigh unto him at any time whatsoever, and let them not approach me, and let them not slay either the soul or the body of me, Thy servant, Za-Walda Ḥawâryât..... And deliver me from the man of incantations and sorcery, and set me at the head of the people, and grant graciously that they may not set themselves in opposition to me in the time of judgment, and deliver me from the attack of the enemy, and from hostile folk, and from him that lieth in wait to despoil me on the highway, and let them not draw nigh unto Za-Walda Ḥawâryât, [and] Walatta[1] Gabriel "Baratâwît".

5. The terror of the destroyer, the terror of the destroyer, the terror of the destroyer, the terror of the lynx (or bear), the terror of the lion, the terror of the panther, the terror of him that maketh afraid, the terror of him that striketh terror, the terror of the dragon, the terror of the king, the terror of the bishop, the terror of the governors, the terror of Yârêd, and [the terror of] their soul, may the judges and the magistrates set under my feet, and may they bow down in homage [unto me]. As the seventy-seven lamps of heaven were given unto Enoch, the son of Yared, even so give Thou unto me love, and rectitude, and grace of voice (or speech) unto Thy servant Za-Walda Ḥawâryât. [Here follows the design of a second cross with human eyes.]

6. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers[1]: the snare is "broken, and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of the Lord [Who made "heaven and earth]". If any man wisheth to thrust a spear into thee, and thou repeatest these names, his spear shall be turned back; and if thou wilt not utter them firmly with thy voice, but dost wear them upon thy breast, they shall deliver thee from thine enemy, and thou shalt escape [from him] by the will of God. If any man wisheth to thrust a spear into thee, and thou repeatest these names, his spear shall be turned back; and if thou wilt not utter them firmly with thy voice, but dost wear them upon thy breast, they shall deliver thee from thine enemy, and thou shalt escape [from him] by the will of God. Even so deliver me, Thy servant, Za-Walda Ḥawâryât.

II. The Magical Prayers that were written for Sebḥat Le'ab are found in Brit. Mus. MS. 18, 996, which consists of two narrow strips of parchment measuring together 5 ft. 4½ in. by 2¾ in. The handwriting is fairly good, and the document probably belongs to the XVIIIth century. At the top is a rude figure of Saint Michael, who holds a drawn sword in his right hand and a dagger in his left; the handle of each weapon terminates in a cross. In the middle is a cross-shaped object with pendent ornaments, and where one portion rests on the other are the two eyes and nose of a human face; at the end of the document is a cross. The text is full of words to the meaning of which I have no clue,

and I have, therefore, thought it better to summarize some of its contents rather than to attempt to translate the whole of it. The text reads:—

1. Names of awe and terror unto men. Wenâêl, and Wenâêl, and Mash-wernâêl. O thou who takest away the strength, and who makest feeble, and who makest to be afraid, as thou didst hide Enoch and Elijah from the face of death, even so do thou hide me from the face of death, and [from] the wrath of the governors and judges, both male and female. And as thou didst shew thyself gracious unto Daniel [when he was] with the lions, even so do thou shew thyself gracious unto me, and make me to approach boldly unto the governors, and judges, and the chief, and the councillor, and man, and woman, and let them give unto me the desire of my mind, me thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

2. Dîdîḳôn, Alêf, Dîdîḳôn, Dîdîḳôn, Dalken! As Elijah put a bridle on the heavens for three years and six months by means of those names, even so do thou set a bridle upon the mouths and tongues and make feeble the power of mine enemy and of those who hate me, so that they may not speak against me words of shameful lies and disgrace, and without love and peace of me, thy servant, Sebḥat Le'ab.

3. Matêḳêxâ, Kêfêmôn, Kêfîdêgen. By means of these names let the people and the nations tremble when they see me, and let them not speak [against] me thy servant, Sebḥat Le'ab. And as Nâbâl was smitten with terror when David arrived with his soldiers, even so let mine enemy and those who hate me tremble when they see thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. And as Uzza was smitten with terror when he touched the ark of Zion, even so let the people, and the nations, and mine enemy, and those who hate me, tremble when they see me, and let them not speak [against] me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

4. By Seḳâ, Sêḳâ, Ṭâḳâ, by Alaḳâ, and Ṭabaḳâ, bury thou the hearts and seize and carry away the minds of mine enemy and of those who hate me, Semûn, Bûkmûn, Fayâkûn, Fayâkûmân, reduce the strength utterly, bring to nought the power, and terrify mine enemy and those who hate me, so that they may never be able to touch either my soul or my body with spear, or sword, or bow, or naphtha, or stick, or stone. O deliver me, and hide me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab.

5. The names which God Almighty gave unto the man Moses. Safarṭes, Anôrôs, Desêmûn, Masfen. In thy name Serôs I take refuge. Let my face shine like the Sun and like the Moon before kings and governors. Let my speech be sweet like honey and sugar, and [seasonable like] salt, and especially in the city of the Nagâxi Sea. O Germâged, Germâged, Germâṣyô, who makest to be afraid and who makest to be in terror, by the voice of wrath which goeth forth from Israel into my spirit, let the devils tremble, and fall down, and be driven away from thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O thou of the thousand names which are like unto the name of Christ, grant thou graciously unto me the desire of my mind when tribulation seizeth me as I stand before kings. Ra'eslâya, Salalâya, Kôlalâya, as ye did stablish the heavens, even so do ye make weak kings and governors, and male and female, so that they may love me and may set me like rings upon their fingers and like seals upon their arms. O Akder, and Aḳder, and Ṭerṭerâs who....., who descend from the land of the aether, as ye shewed yourselves loving unto the names of all those [who love you], even so let be regarded lovingly by kings and governors the name of me, thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Nemderôs, Kemderôs, Guôgûsh, who make to go out the heart of kings, close up [as] with a key the heart of my enemy, and may the.... of his way be blotted out. Safôlḳâêl Emmanuel are thy names. [Here follows a figure in the form of a cross.]

6. By the might of these thy names let me fetter the tongues of mine enemies which speak, and let them not declare words of calumny, without love and peace, concerning thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Barhânâel, let thy light enshroud me like a shadow and stablish it in the heart of me thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. O Xarbûr Dôr, who didst make the heart of Moses to be enlightened, even so do thou lighten the eyes of the heart of me thy servant.

7. [In] the Name of God the Father. [In] the Name of God the Son. [In] the Name of [God] the Holy Spirit. Abyater, Tâ'âs, Ozyâ[s], and Melîkîyâs, Aḳsâfer. [In] the name of Ḥarâxên, Ḥarâxûn, Ḥarâfeker, Ṭaṭajîn, Zaḥajûn, Ḥeflemâêl. In the name of Dôr, Alâdôr, Nât, Dânât, Rôdôs, Tâ'âs, Absâter of hosts, Ḥefrerwâḳ, Ḥefrerwâḳ, Ḥefrerwâḳ. By these names, and by thy piercing word, and by the sharp sword of Michael may be cursed . . . .; by these names and by Thy Word, Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, and the Son of Mary the Virgin, and by the sword of Michael may the unclean spirit be driven away and cut down. And wheresoever this prayer may come may it drive out and expel Bûdâ

and Bâryâ from the man whom they have seized, and may it set free the servant of God, Sebḥat Le'ab, from the [evil] work of man and from magic.

8. Alfâ, Alfâ, Alfâ! Get thee out! And when thou hast gone out thou shalt not return, saith God, and the memorial of thy name shall perish for ever and for ever. Amen. Yâḳua, and Yâḳî. O Thou Bûdâ, and thou Bâryâ! Thou Gânên, and thou Satan, and thou Pêrâ, and thou Nadâd, who take upon yourselves multitudes of forms! O Ahyâ Xîrâhyâ Yamrâêl, thou mighty one, God Almighty, Adonai, the Holy One, Thou Holy Spirit, Xuḥalâ, the son of One, Balofḥam, Bamyôn, I speak unto you. Iyâel, extinguisheth the fire of the Lord God. Ĕrûḥal, Ĕrûḥal, Ĕrûḥal, Samtâêl, Pelmâêl, Yaxakût, Gadên, Pillar of light, garment of light, shine brightly before the face of the mighty one, the foe of Bâryâ, Pelmâ, and shew me the power and awe of the king of glory, Pêmâ. Let him neither appear unto nor touch the soul of thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. [Here follows a cross.]

9. In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, One God. Nâzer, Nâzer, Nâzer, Nâzer, four [times] Azerzer. These are the magical [names] of healing which shall be performed for Thy servant Sebḥat Le'ab. Admetĕrôs, Gâyaṣṭô, Batuʿag! Let deliverance from the disease caused by worms be given to Thy servant Sebhat Le'ab.

III. The Magical Prayers that were written for Gabra Shelâsê Tezâzû are found in Brit. Mus. Oriental 4,716, which consists of two long, narrow strips of parchment measuring together 4 ft. 7½ in. by 2¾ in. The handwriting is peculiar, and, though apparently plain, is difficult to make out in many places; the document probably belongs to the last half of the XVIIIth century. At the top are two human figures, one being probably that of a bishop, and the other a member of the laity; they are painted in red, brown, black, and yellow colours. In the middle is another painted scene in which a priest is addressing a cock-headed demon or deity. The text, which is addressed to a being called Tamâ, reads:—

In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, One God. A prayer against the tongue, and the tongue of Bâryâ, and of men — both those who are kinsfolk and those who are strangers — [and against] fever, and rheumatism, and inflammation of the lungs, and bowels, and diarrhoea, and dysentery, and cholera. Behold, I take refuge in the exaltation of thy name, and in thy pre-eminence which was in the beginning, [and is expressed by] the letter alêph, so that Thou mayest deliver me, O Christ, from the insurrection of the tongue and mouth, for the tongue slew the company of the martyrs in thousands; one word of calumny is mightier than the sharpest sword. [Deliver me, O] TAMÂ, by Thy going forth from the company of the Father and His Son, and by Thy state of being which was before all worlds. And moreover, I would that Thou didst deliver me, O Christ, from the ambush (or wiles) of the tongue, the persecutor of Daniel, whom Thou didst deliver from Nebuchadnezzar, the wicked one, when the people were moved and cast him into the blazing fire. O TAMÂ, by Thy bodily form which sprang from the seed of the fathers who succeeded each other, and from the Holy Spirit, and which was more beautiful than the forms of the children of men who are beautiful, deliver Thou me, O Christ God, the Son of His substance, from the unjust tongue, which consumeth injustice for its food, for the tongue slayeth and maketh alive. O TAMÂ, by Thy two-fold birth, the one being of the Father, and divine, and the other of man, [I entreat Thee], O Christ, Thou God Who art alive and not dead, to deliver me from the tongue of man and from mine own tongue, for death is strong and cruel. O TAMÂ, because Thou wast wrapped in poor and miserable swaddling-bands, and again, because Thou didst lie in the stall whilst the ox looked on, deliver me, O Christ, from littleness of the tongue; for there is another worm to me through speech, and let not terror at the cutting down of great trees overwhelm me, for it is the axe. O TAMÂ, by Thy persecution, and by Thy rapid flight to Dabra Ḳuĕsḳuâm during the slaughter of the children of [Thy] native country, deliver me, O Christ, from the service (?) of the tongue, by which alone we can be free, for I have lived (?) fifty years without turning aside therefrom. O TAMÂ, by Thy circumcision, and by Thy standing naked before the people at Thy circumcision, [which took place] on the eighth day after Thy birth, give me counsel, O Christ, and deliver me from the ..... that I may flee from the tongue, for it terrifieth me greatly, and the whale which is joined therewith will thrust me forth. O TAMÂ, by Thy coming into the house of the sanctuary forty days after Thy birth, and Thy standing up before Thy true Father, deliver me, O Christ from the calumny of the tongue, which is outward, for the tongue of man slayeth .... O TAMÂ, by Thy return to the country of Nazareth from the land of Egypt, and by Thy rearing, and by Thy receiving of abundant rebukes in the house which was built by Joseph for a space of forty (sic) years, graciously deliver me, O Christ, from the evil tongue which slandereth its neighbour in secret and not openly. O TAMÂ, by Thy baptism, and by the voice of the Father, and by the Holy Spirit which descended upon Thy head from heaven, deliver me, O Christ, and save me wholly from the tongue of the men who outwardly speak words of peace, but whose hearts are full of guile. O TAMÂ, by Thy fasting, and by Thy temptation in the desert for forty days — for Thou hast taught me to fast, and hast been with me for these fifty years — deliver me from the rising up of the feeble tongue which breaketh the bones, and kindleth a fire which will burn for a hundred years. O TAMÂ, by Thy journeyings when Thou wast in the world, and by Thine appearance as preacher of the Gospel for three years before Thy death, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the man who listeneth with deceit, being openly a friend, but from whom there cometh envy, for a viper is better than he. O TAMÂ, by Thy weeping, and by the tears which were on Thy face at the death of Thy beloved Lazarus in the presence of his companions who mourned him, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the man who is of no account, and from the mouth of Pharaoh, the devourer of the lowermost fire of Egypt, even as Thou didst deliver Jacob in the sea. O TAMÂ, by Thine exceedingly great humility when Thou didst wash alike the feet of Judas, the tare, and those of Peter, the wheat; O King of kings, Christ, Whose throne is in the heavens, purify me with Thy silver from the dross of the tongue of the evil man by means of the fire of repentance and not by water. O TAMÂ, by the bread of Thy body, and by the cup of Thy vivifying blood which Thou didst give unto Thy disciples on the first feast of unleavened bread, O Melchisedek Christ, Priest of the priesthood, take tithe [of me] being the son of Abraham and Levi, and deliver me from a false tongue [Here follows the second picture.] Deliver from the tongue of the man of Bâryâ and ... thy servant Gabra Shelâsê Tĕzâzû. O TAMÂ, by the smiting of Thy face, and by the blows upon Thy head which was enclosed with thorns, and by the unclean spittle which the Jews spat upon Thee, deliver me, O Christ, from this generation, and illumine my body and my spirit with Thy light ..... when I see the habitation which Thou hast received. O TAMÂ, by the sweat of Thy face which fell in drops like blood by reason of Thine exceedingly earnest prayer and worship in the hidden place in the desert, deliver me from the tongue which overthroweth, for the labour of the cross is mightier than all pain. O TAMÂ, by Thy being seized and bound, and by the coming out of men after Thee by night with knives and staves — now Thou wast alone and poor — deliver Thou me from the tongue which killeth souls, for it cometh upon me suddenly, and wageth war against me. O TAMÂ, by Thy going to Caiaphas and Hannâ, and again from Caiaphas [unto] the judge, for men came unto Thee by night with lamps, and torches, and lanterns, deliver me, O Christ, by Thy brotherly arms from the tongue of the man of savage heart and haughty mind. O TAMÂ, by Thy standing up before Pontius Pilate, and by Thy coming outside when they dressed Thee in a tunic, deliver me, O Christ, from the tongue of the wicked.... for to his tongue was an evil reward, and Judas, the senseless man, became terror-stricken, and he hanged himself with a rope, and died. O TAMÂ, by Thy back, and by Thy patient endurance of the scourging when Thou wast wholly shrouded in great and severe tribulation, deliver me, O Christ, my Father, Who didst beget me without carnal intercourse, and grant unto me the gift of sonship, as long as the tongue can speak, for through Thee there shall be in the heavens a covering [for me]. O TAMÂ, by Thine abundant suffering, and by Thy prolonged agony..... deliver me, O Christ, from the sharp point of the tongue, and deliver me, O Thou who didst stand like a slave before Pilate the Greek, and didst bear the punishment with which thieves are punished. O TAMÂ, by Thy cross, and by Thy crucifixion, O Thou Who wast nailed between the two thieves, deliver me, O Christ, from the combat of Diabolos, and from his hosts, and from the counsel of the tongue of Caiaphas — now he was the high priest — and may the years of my body [not] come under his time of power. O TAMÂ, by Thy hands, and by the nails of death by which they were pierced, O fruit of the tree of error, a man in the place of that which was plucked by Eve, feed me, O Christ, with the tree of life for which I hope. The softness of speech in the heat of the sun drieth up; let not the speech of error which must be cut down go forth from me. O TAMÂ, by Thy feet whereon Thou didst walk about with the cross and the sharp nails to which the Jews fixed Thee, deliver me, O Christ, from the calumny of the

tongue especially, O Thou Who didst go to Golgotha bearing the heavy cross, and didst take upon Thyself the form of a servant, although Thou wast the Son [of God]. O TAMÂ, by Thy mother who was inflamed with the heat of tenderness for Thee when Thou wast on the cross, and who went with John unto the foot thereof, bring me out, O Christ, from the place of temptation and from the pit which children [of men] have dug for the tongue. O TAMÂ, by Thy mouth which drank wormwood and gall, and also by Thy tongue, for Thou hast taught me the wisdom of seven years when Thou wast on the cross, deliver me, O Christ, and defend me from the cursed tongue of a child who hateth [his] father. O TAMÂ, by the departure of Thy soul [from the body], and by Thy descent unto the place whereto the souls of Adam and Abel went down, even unto the sea of fire, lead me, O Christ, and guide me as Thou didst guide the ark of Noah unto Mount Ḳĕdû (Ḳardô?), and direct me and bring me into a safe haven; for the sea of fire seetheth and the waves thereof are boiling. O TAMÂ, by Thy violent death, the death of the wood of the cross, through the greatness of the unwonted hatred for Thee of [the Jews], who stirred themselves up against the Man because He was good, and were moved on behalf of another (i. e., Barabbas), deliver me, O Christ, from the ..... who are kinsfolk, for their tongues are coals, and their words flames of fire. O TAMÂ, by Thy dead body, and by the bringing down of the same from the cross by the men of Thy religion, the Gospel, Jesus Christ, Whom the Highest delivered by [His] arms, deliver me, and save me from the tongue of the mighty man, for it is a sharp knife, and not a member of the body. O TAMÂ, by Thy grave, which was the grave of a stranger and of a sojourner like unto that of Thy fathers, and was not like that of David, the royal son, deliver me, O Christ, from the evil tongue of the man that is like unto a man who hath a serpent within him, for Satan is a helper of him that is his son and heir. O TAMÂ, by Thy Resurrection, when the world shook by reason of Thy light, and the guardians of the sepulchres were terrified, and the dead bodies rose up, deliver, O Christ, the people of the world from the tongue. Unto Thee it belongeth to kiss him that slew Thee. Who is the man of the peace of Judas? O deliver from the tongue of kinsfolk and of stranger Thy servant Gabra Shalâsê Tezâzû.

IN[1] THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY SPIRIT, ONE GOD.

[Col. 1] We will declare unto you, O beloved brethren, ye children of this church, and may [God] make bright the eyes of your hearts to hear [them], the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, which [name] is in Hebrew MÂRÎHÂM, (a sweet name!) the life of the world, and the God-bearer, whose great praise and honour neither the beings of heaven nor the beings of earth will ever be able to bring to an end. May her prayer and her blessing be with her servant[2] . . . . . for ever and ever!

Before the Miracles shall be read let the people hearken with the ear of understanding! Hear ye with your ears, and lay up in your hearts the majesty and the praise of our holy Lady, [Col. 2] the two-fold Virgin, MARY who is called in Hebrew MÂRÎHÂM,[3] that is to say MARY, the guide unto the kingdom of heaven. Our Lady MARY existed before the world [was created] in the mind of God. For the sake of MARY Adam and Eve were made, and Adam called his wife "Life" because he knew that MARY would go forth from his loins and from the womb of his wife. What book can contain the [story of the] majesty of MARY? For the sake of MARY the whole world was made. And if everything [concerning MARY] were to be written down the world would not be able to contain it. What ear could listen unto it? What tongue could declare it? What voice could declaim it? What brain could comprehend it? And what mind could [Col. 3] think it out and understand it? Nevertheless we will declare a little thereof unto you, in proportion as our Lady MARY shall shew compassion unto us.

[1] The following text is written on a leaf which has been inserted between foll. 1 and 2; it is, substantially, the text which is given in the manuscript B after the "Salutations" to the Virgin; see the Ethiopic text, pp. 5 and 6.

[2] The name is omitted. [3] See LUDOLF, Commentarius, pp. 346 and 350.

Now MARY was declared from Adam unto Abraham, and from Abraham unto Moses, and from Moses unto David, the son of Jesse; and our Lady MARY appeared under many forms. The generation of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, sprang from the house of David the king, and from the house of Aaron the priest, with reference to her mother; and the name of her father was Îyâḳêm[1] (Joachim), and the name of her who gave birth unto our Queen MARY was Ḥannâ. Unto whom hath the power to comprehend her state of virginity been given? The angels were unable to comprehend the state of virginity, for they transgressed through the lust of the flesh, and they went down to the earth in days of old.[2] Who is like unto our Lady MARY [Col. 4] who was the place of abode of the Father? And who is like unto our Lady MARY who became the habitation of the Son? And who is like unto our Lady MARY who became a house for the Holy Spirit? Can any man abide without sin? Nay, for no man hath carried fire [without being burned], and there is no one who hath not committed sin except our Lady MARY. Our Lady MARY is more pure than the angels. Our Lady MARY is greater than all the generations of women. The mind of our Lady MARY is wholly the mind of God. The character of our Lady MARY is the character of God. Our Lady MARY beckoned unto God with her purity. Our Lady MARY gave birth unto God with her virginity. Our Lady MARY became [Col. 5] a dwelling of joy unto God. Our Lady MARY spake by the Prophets. Our Lady MARY preached by the Apostles. Our Lady MARY giveth praise with the mouth of all creation. Honour ye our Lady MARY, O children of this church, for our Lady MARY is the redemption for sinners, and our Lady MARY giveth gracious gifts unto those who minister unto her with good service. Put your confidence in our Lady MARY with all your hearts, and have no doubt whatsoever but that it is she who bringeth you salvation. And prostrate ye yourselves before her image (or picture); for whosoever boweth not down before her his name shall be blotted out of existence, and the memorial of his name shall be unknown, and the angels [Col. 6] of heaven shall say, "Amen".

[2] This seems to be an allusion to Genesis vi. 2:—"the sons of God saw the daughters of men "that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose." In the Book of Adam and Eve (Malan's translation, p. 137), the "sons of God" are identified with the children of Seth, and the "daughters of men" with the descendants of Cain. The sons of Seth were warned by Enoch not to leave the holy mountain whereon they lived, but they rose up against him, and refused to hearken unto his words, and went down to the plain. "And when they looked at the daughters of Cain, at their beautiful figure, and "at their hands and feet dyed with colour, and tattooed in ornaments on their faces, the fire of sin was "kindled in them. Then Satan made them look most beautiful before the sons of Seth, as he also made "the sons of Seth appear of the fairest in the eyes of the daughters of Cain, so the daughters of Cain "lusted after the sons of Seth like ravenous beasts, and the sons of Seth after the daughters of Cain, until "they committed abomination with them."

THE INTRODUCTION TO LADY MEUX MANUSCRIPT NO. 3 (B).

Here beginneth the book which shall be read before [the priests] recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY, that is to say, the Book of Rules that came forth from the throne of Mark the Apostle out of the Church of Mu'allaḳah[1] of Maṣr (i. e., Cairo) where the teachers, the honourable Archbishops who were the orthodox treasurers of the Mysteries, laid it up. Our Lady, the holy Virgin Mary, declared these rules unto them [at intervals] during a long period of time; unto some of them she spake in dreams, unto others she spake in visions, and unto others she spake openly. Now these men were Abbâ Abraham, and Abbâ Mark, and Abbâ Matthew, and they were the workers of wonderful things; and the story of their words was written down in the Book of the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin [B fol. 2*a*. 2] MARY, [telling] how she spake unto them, and how she wrought for them wonderful deeds and miracles. And this Book of their Rules was translated from the Arabic into the Gĕ'ĕz, [the language of] the country of Ethiopia, in the days of John, the Archbishop of Alexandria, and in the days of our Archbishops Abbâ Michael and Abbâ Gabriel,[2] and the Bishop Abbâ John, when they went forth into Ethiopia in the third year, in the days of our king Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb,[1] who was surnamed Constantine, after he had reigned seven years. And the Book of their Rules saith thus:—"On every Sunday, that is on every first "day of the week, and on every festival day of our Lady MARY, they "shall not fail to recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY in all the churches "[B fol. 2*b*. 1] with great honour and with great gladness, for MARY is "honourable, and beneath God Almighty there is no one who is more "honourable". And they anathematized [those who would not do this] so that [the priests] might not cease to recite the Miracles of our Lady MARY on every Sunday, that is, on every first day of the week, and on each of her days of festival.

[1] I. e., the famous church dedicated to the Virgin, more commonly known as "El-Mu'allaḳah," or the "hanging", from the fact that it is suspended between two bastions, and must be entered by a staircase. The church was probably founded in the VIth century of our era. "It is a double-aisled church, and as such is remarkable in having no transepts" (BUTLER, Coptic Churches, vol. 1. p. 208). In the list of the Churches of Cairo given by Ibn Dûḳmâḳ (ed. Vollers, Cairo, 1893, p. 1. v) the position of this church is thus described:—

Now her days of festival are these:—on the sixth day of Nuḥasê[2] they celebrate her Conception; from the sixteenth day [of Nuḥasê] to the twenty-first day, that is to say for six days, the festival of her Assumption similar to that which they celebrate for the Resurrection of her Son; on the tenth day of Maskarram, the coming of the Image of our Lady[3] into the city of Ṣêdênyâ,[4] the shrine of Marînâ—now this is the Image which put on flesh and from which drops of sweat fell; on the twenty-first day of Maskarram, and on the twenty-first day of Ṭĕḳemt, and on the sixth day of Ḥĕdâr, her advent into Dabra Ḳuesḳâm;[5] on the twenty-first day, the stablishing of the lamp; [B fol. 2*b*. 2] on the third day of Tâḫshâsh, her advent into the sanctuary (i. e., the Temple at Jerusalem); on the twenty-first day of the same month, and on the twenty-second day, [they] celebrate the commemoration of Bishop Dexius—now when he was keeping the festival on this day [the Lady Mary] gave him apparel which had not been made by the hand of man, and a throne whereon no other man had ever sat; on the twenty-eighth day of Tâḫshâsh, which is the festival Gênâ, and on the twenty-ninth day, her giving birth to our Redeemer; on the twenty-first day of Ṭêr, her death; on the sixteenth day of Yakâtît, her gift of the "Kîdâna Mĕḫrĕt",[1] and on the twenty-first day of this month her commemoration is also celebrated; on the twenty-first day of Magâbît, and on the twenty-ninth day also, her Conception of our Redeemer; on the twenty-first day of Mîyâzyâ and on the first day of Genbôt, her birth (now there are some who say that her birth took place on the tenth day of Maskarram, but we say what is certain about it, even as our Patriarchs have taught us).

[1] This king was the fourth son of David (he reigned from A. D. 1380 to A. D. 1409) and reigned thirty-four years and two months, i. e., from A. D. 1434 to A. D. 1468. Under his rule Ethiopian literature flourished, and Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb was himself an author; the "Miracles of the Virgin" was one of the many books which were translated from Arabic into Ethiopic during his reign. See BASSET, Études sur L'Histoire d'Éthiopie, Paris, 1882, pp. 102, 243—246; LUDOLF, Commentarius, p. 301—340; and the history of Zarʿa Jâʿḳôb and his son Baʿeda Mâryâm published and translated by PERRUCHON under the title, Les Chroniques Zarʿa Yâʿeqôb et de Baʿeda Mâryâm, Paris, 1893.

[2] The names of the months in Ethiopic are:—Maskarram (September), Ṭĕḳĕmt (October), Ḥedâr (November), Tâḥshâsh (December), Ṭên (January), Yakâtît (February), Magâbît (March), Miyâzyâ (April), Genbôt (May), Sanê (June), Ḥamlê (July), Naḥasê (August), Pâgwĕmên (intercalary). The Ethiopian year began on August 29th.

And on the twenty-first of this [B fol. 3*a*. 1] month the people shall be gathered together in the land of Egypt, in the church which is called Dabra Maṭmâḳ, and they shall be gathered together from the East, and from the West, from the South, and from the North, and from every country whatsoever. And they shall encamp in booths, and in tents, and in tabernacles, and in companies, and they shall celebrate the festival of the Virgin from the twenty-fifth day unto the twenty-ninth (?) day with great honour, and joy, and gladness, and jubilation unceasingly for five days, together with the angels, and the martyrs, and the righteous, and those who make intercession. And the Christians shall see her openly, and they shall celebrate a festival with gladness, and honour, and joy on the twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, and twenty-fourth days [of the month. And they shall celebrate] a great festival on the twenty-fifth day because her Son planted dry rods and made them to become trees [B fol. 3*a*. 2]; and on the eighth day of the month Sanê because her Son made water to flow from the rock and healed those who were sick; and on the twentieth day of this month because the Apostles were assembled, and her Son came down to build her house; and on the twenty-first day [to commemorate] the sanctification of her house; and also on the twenty-first day of the month Ḥamlê. Now all the festivals of our Lady MARY are thirty-two in number.

And they shall honour these days of festival like the first day of the week (Sunday), and the people shall do no work of any kind whatsoever in them, from year to year and for ever as far as these festivals of our Lady, the holy Virgin Mary, are concerned. And those who do not come on every first day of the week to church to hear the Miracles of the Virgin, the Patriarchs whose names we have already mentioned above shall anathematize them whether they be male or whether they be female, except in such cases as when they are prevented from coming by sickness, or by some serious cause, or by some physical infirmity [B fol. 3*b*. 1], or some piece of work which preventeth a man from coming to church. Now every one who shall hear the reading of the Book of the Miracles of the Virgin, our Lady MARY the God-bearer shall bless, whether they be men or whether they be women, on these festivals of our Lady Mary. And on every first day of the week both men and women shall be gathered together in the church, and after the conclusion of the song of peace they shall put off their ornaments, that is, their ornaments of gold and silver, from their hands, and from their fingers, and from their necks, and from their ears, and from their heads; but the women must have their heads shorn even as Paul said.[1] And it is meet for them to compose their minds to listen unto the

[1] See 1. Corinthians xi. 6. Saint Paul's words are:—"For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered."

[reading of the] Miracles of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY; and there shall be great silence [B fol. 3*b*. 2] and no man shall speak. Whosoever is strong shall stand up to listen, and whosoever is weak shall sit down. And before they read the Miracles of our Lady MARY the Patriarch shall bless [the people]; and if there be no Patriarch there, the Metropolitan shall bless [them]; and if there be no Metropolitan there, the Bishop shall bless [them]; and if there be no Bishop there, the priest who is of the highest rank shall bless [them], on the East, and on the West, on the South, and on the North.

Then shall the Bishop or priest set the crown upon his head, and prostrate himself three times before the ark; and he shall offer up incense, and he shall cense [the place] three times, saying, "Glory and honour "be unto the Holy Trinity, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, "henceforth and for ever and ever! Amen." And he shall go to the Image of our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, and he shall cense [it] [B fol. 4*a*. 1] three times, and shall say, "Rejoice, O thou that art full "of grace, God is with thee! Blessed art thou among women, and bless- "ed is the fruit of thy womb. Do thou make supplication and intercede "with thy beloved Son, so that He may pardon unto us our sins." And if there be a Metropolitan there he shall then cense [the place] three times, and after him all the priests, according to their grades, shall do [likewise], until all those who have been appointed priests shall have finished the censing. And after this they shall read the Book of the Miracles of our Lady three at a time; those who know the Book shall each read three of the miracles from [the Book of] the Miracles of our Lady MARY, but those who are not able to read the Book in its integrity shall each read one of the lesser miracles, so that the blessing of the Virgin may not be destroyed. And during the reading three priests shall burn incense without ceasing; one towards the ark, and one towards the Image of our Lady MARY, and one towards the reader of the miracle [B fol. 4*a*. 2].

And let not any Christian imagine that it is a light matter to hear read the Miracles of our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, for it is a great and an honourable thing; and let neither man nor woman fail to listen unto them, lest they fall into carelessness. And he that is able to hear her Miracles let him take an offering on that day, provided that he is not prevented [from so doing] by some serious cause as we have already said. And he that is unable to take an offering when he heareth [the reading] of the Miracles shall go unto the church, and he himself shall be in the place of an offering, provided that he listeneth unto the Miracles in faith. And those who neglect (or treat with contempt) the Book of her Miracles, and the Covenant with our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, are outside the faith in the Incarnation of the Son of God, and cannot be numbered among the sheep of the fold of Christ. And they shall be under a ban, and excommunicated, and [B fol. 4*b*. 1] cut off by the swords of Peter and of Paul, and by the sword of the words of Abbâ Michael, and Abbâ Gabriel; and they shall be cut off and excommunicated by us also because we have received the power of these [saints], and therefore we can cut off and bind fast with a fetter which cannot be opened until her Son shall come in glory him that will not do honour unto the festivals of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, even as unto the first day of the week. Amen. But upon those who wish to honour, and to exalt, and to love her with all their hearts and with all their might shall dwell the prayer and the blessing of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth unto God, and they shall sanctify them for ever and ever and ever. Amen.

[1] I. e., the tone used in the churches in Lent, and on fast days, and on the Eves of festivals, and for funeral ceremonies; see DILLMANN, Lexicon, col. 1002.

[Then shall they] say thrice, "Salutation unto MARY the Queen, the true "vine, on which, although it hath never been cultivated, thou shalt find "blessed fruit. The Son of God in truth came and became man from "her, and she gave birth unto Him and He hath saved us and hath par- "doned unto us our sins. Thou hast found grace, O Virgin. Many shall "hold converse concerning thy honour, for the Word of the Father came "and took upon Himself human nature from thee; Hallelujah! Come ye "and look upon this Bride, this Woman who is adorned, the mother of "the Lamb, who is enveloped in such great glory, even as saith the son "of thunder, John the pure virgin, who cried out, saying, 'He hath made "'this bride to shine exceedingly, yea, [B fol. 5*a*. 1] more than the star of "'the morning'. This is the New Zion, the city of our God, wherein "dwelleth the joy [of] all the holy prophets."

"Rejoice thou, O MARY, in the pleasure of its passover"; and thou shalt recite this passage unto the end thereof in the tone [called] 'Azel. Then shall they read the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, each man [reading] three at a time. And after the reading of the Miracles they shall all sing a hymn together, and shall say thus:—"Blessings be upon this our Lady, the holy MARY, who gave "birth to our Salvation! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! upon all of "us, the people [here]. Unto Thy Cross, O Lord, we will ascribe glory; "Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Salutation unto thee, O John, the "son of thunder (Boanerges). Salutation unto thee, O John, who didst "write the Apocalypse. Salutation unto thee, O John Theologos. Salut- "ation unto thee, O John, the beloved of the Lord. [B fol. 5*a*. 2] Salut- "ation unto thee, O John, the virgin. Salutation unto thee, O John the "Evangelist. Salutation unto thee, O John, who didst lie in the bosom "of God. Salutation unto you, O Peter, and Paul, and James, and John, "and Andrew, and Matthew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Thomas, "and James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddeus, and Nathaniel, and

"Matthias, and Luke, and Mark, and James the Bishop. Bless ye us, "your children by the command of the Spirit.

"Salutation unto thee, MARY, thou Door of the East, which brought "forth the Light. Salutation unto thee, thou Vine of Eskêdêrê. Salutation "unto thee, thou Splendour that can be seen. Salutation unto thee, O "thou that art ornamented with rays of light (?). Salutation unto thee, for "thou hast given birth unto the Creator. Salutation unto thee, thou Rod "of Aaron which bore fruit. Salutation unto thee whom we worship with "a psalm. Let each one read [B fol. 5*b*. 1] the Book of thy Miracles in "peace! Bless thou us!

THE ADDRESS OF THE READER OF THE MIRACLES OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY TO THE CONGREGATION.

Hear, O ye my fathers, and my brethren, and my sisters, who are in this church hoping to hear the Miracles of our Lady, the holy Virgin, the two-fold MARY, who gave birth unto God, and let those who are upon high seats come down, and do ye who are seated rise and stand up; and gird about you your apparel [B fol. 6*b*. 2], let down coverings of your heads and [put off from] you your ornaments. Have ye not heard that it is said, "If a man be able to offer up an offering [let him do so], and

"if he cannot, let him hearken unto the Miracles of the Lady of us all, "MARY, who gave birth unto God, and it shall be unto him for an offer- "ing; and our Lady shall love him that listeneth thereunto, and she will "bless quickly him that prayeth and listeneth with all his heart." Do ye then stand up and make yourselves worthy to receive your reward for ever and ever. Amen.

Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou Mother of our Lord Jesus Christ! When the Book of thy Miracles is being read overshadow [us] with thy wings. Whatsoever words thereof we hear make thou to put forth roots, and make the stalk and branches to grow up, and make them to bring forth fruit thirtyfold, and sixtyfold, and an hundredfold. And daily do thou make intercession on our behalf, and according to the power which hath been given [B fol. 7*a*. 1] unto thee by the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit make thou our sins to be lightly esteemed. Depart not thou from us in this world, and in that which is to come let not our soul separate itself from thy soul, for ever and ever! Amen.

O my Lady, thou Mother of salvation, Mother of light, Mother of incense, Mother of offering, Mother of fire, thou only Mother, Mother of the King, Mother of Christ the Messiah, O Mother divine and awe-inspiring through the compassion of thy Son, look thou [favourably] upon our supplication, and be thou graciously pleased with our entreaties, and by thy prayer do thou cool the wrath of thy Son! Amen. May the Jews who are doomed to perdition and whose name exciteth to wrath go down and have their habitation in the lowermost depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the wicked Jews who wish not [to hear] thy name and who deny thy virginity be mown down by the sword of Michael, may they be burnt in the torment of fire, and may they descend and have their habitation [B fol. 7*a*. 2] in the lowermost depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the lying Jews who hold thy virginity in abomination be fettered and bound in chains of fire, and may they dwell [in the lowermost depths] of the place of judgment and corruption! Amen. May the evil-doing Jews who curse thy virginity be cut down by the sword of Michael, may they suffer pain in the torture of the fire, and may they be sealed down in the depths of the place of judgment whence there is no place of escape! Amen. May the leprous and filthy Jews who blaspheme thy virginity be punished by the hand of Michael, may they become involved in the Gehenna of fire, and may they be hurled down headlong and cast into the depths of the place of judgment! Amen. May the faces of those who follow Christ, and who follow the Gospel, and who read thy miracles, be clothed by the light of thy grace, and may they be preserved by thy covenant! Amen. May those blessed and good men who esteem holy thy virginity, and those who take refuge at thine image clothe themselves in the light of thy grace! May they be permitted by grace to enter into thy bridal chamber, may they be [B fol. 7*b*. 1] sanctified by the Blood of thy Son, may they inherit life and may they have as their lot a portion and an inheritance with the saints! Amen. And may the holy, and the elect, and the pure who sing praises unto thy virginity, and who cry out before thine image, array themselves in the light of thy grace, and may they exult and rejoice in the bridal chamber of thy Son! [Amen].

I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou couch of the heavenly Bridegroom. I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, O my Lady MARY, thou chariot of the Sun of righteousness. I bow down before thee and I give praise unto thee, even as John of the golden mouth (Chrysostom) gave praise unto thee, saying, "In the sweetness of his lips rejoice thou, O my Lady MARY, for of thee "God the Word became incarnate, and He went forth from thee [B fol. 7*b*. 2] "like a bridegroom who goeth forth from his chamber. Rejoice, O my "Lady MARY, because there went forth from thee the truly Good Shepherd, "Who seeketh for the lamb which hath been cast away, and when He "hath found it He beareth it upon His shoulders. Rejoice, O my Lady

"MARY, for through thee have been broken the fetters of the monster which "causeth suffering, and which God did cast into judgment. Rejoice, O "my Lady MARY, thou holy land, whereunto God came riding upon a "cloud of light and entered into thee. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, from "whom God, Who maketh His saints to rest, appeared. Rejoice, O my "Lady MARY, in whom God was well pleased, and from whom it was "[ordained] before the world that the Word should be born of thee, the "Word Whom, together with His Father and the [B fol. 8*a*. 1] Holy "Spirit, we adore. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, the Mother of Him "Whose Apostle I am. Rejoice, O my Lady MARY, on whose virginity "Him to Whom thou didst give birth set a seal after He had been born, "and whose virginity was not destroyed."

Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, who didst give birth to God without the foundation of thy womb being rent asunder. Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, who didst give birth to the Word without the seal of thy virginity being opened and changed, and who art called Mother through the birth of our holy Redeemer. Salutation unto thee, O my Lady MARY, for thou hast found grace, and God is with thee. Entreat thou and make intercession with thy beloved Son that He may pardon unto us our sins.

On the sixteenth day of the month Yakâtit[1] there shall be celebrated the commemoration of our holy Lady, the Virgin two-fold MARY, who gave birth to God, because she received therein the Covenant of Mercy from her Son, our Redeemer Jesus Christ. Whosoever shall celebrate her commemoration, and shall call upon her name, and shall give alms unto the poor and needy, even if it be a cup of cold water only, [shall receive his reward.]

Now when the Son of this holy woman MARY [A fol. 75*a*. 2], whose pure flesh He had taken upon Himself, went up into heaven, He sat on the right hand of His Father, having fulfilled all the Law, and taken upon Himself human nature, but without sin, and gained dominion over the pains of the Cross by His good pleasure and will which He exercised for our redemption. And He left his mother MARY in the house of John His disciple, whom He loved, and whom He committed unto her protection, saying, "Behold thy son", and to that disciple also He said, "Behold thy mother"; and our Lady Mary dwelt [there], and she was wont to go unto the grave of her Son, that is to say, to Golgotha, [A fol. 75*b*. 1] to pray there. And it came to pass that when the Jews saw her they were filled with wrath and jealousy, and they wished to stone her, but God made her to disappear from their sight. Then they took counsel together and appointed guards over His grave, so that she might not be able to come and pray there again; but she ceased not to go there each day. Now the guards never saw her, for the mantle of the glory of her Son made her to be invisible, and angels came unto her at all times to minister unto her, and her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, watched over her [A fol. 75*b*. 2] continually, and fulfilled for her all her desires. And after this He made her to ascend into heaven, and He shewed her the place where the righteous rest and where dwell Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the spirits of all the fathers who had died from Adam until Christ(?) received her. And they bowed down before her and said, "Glory be unto God Who hath created thee for us, flesh of "our flesh, and bone of our bone; in thee we have found redemption, and "thou hast become the gate of life [leading] from destruction through the "Incarnation of the Son of God of thee" [A fol. 76*a*. 1]. Then the angels transported her and brought her unto her beloved Son [Who was seated upon] His throne; and flames of fire covered Him round about on the right hand and on the left. Then our Lord took her hand, and He kissed her mouth and said unto her, "Hast thou come, O My Mother?" Then He made her to ascend His glorious throne and He made her to sit [there] with Him, and He told her the story of the joy and gladness which eye had never seen, and ear had never heard, and the heart of man had never imagined, that He had prepared for her. And below the throne she saw David [A fol. 76*a*. 2]. her father, the king of Israel, together with all the company of the Prophets, and the angels, and the souls of the righteous were standing round about them, and he was singing psalms to his harp and saying, "Hearken, O my daughter, see, and "incline thine ear, forget thy people in thy father's house, for the King "hath desired thy beauty, and He is thy Lord."

And again the angels set her so that she might see the place of judgment, and they brought her unto the place which was the boundary of the darkness that had been prepared for Satan and his angels, and for all those who walked in his ways [A fol. 76*b*. 1]. Then our Lady MARY

said, "Woe is me! Who could announce unto the children of men that "they would come here?" And an angel said unto her, "Fear thou not, "O Mary, God is with thee. He is with thee, and with those who [shall "come] after thee". Then the angels bore her along and brought her back to the [former] place, and straightway our Lady Mary sat down, being exceedingly sorrowful for all the sinners. And inasmuch as that day was the sixteenth day of the month Yakâtît, she stood up at the place of the skull (i. e., Golgotha), and [A fol. 76 b. 2] she made supplication unto her Son, saying, "I adjure Thee, O my Son, by God Almighty "Thy Father, and by Thy Name Christ, and by the Paraclete Thy Spirit, "and by my womb which bore Thee, Whom earth is not able to bear, "and Whom even the angels are not able to approach, for nine months "and five days; I adjure Thee, O my Son, by Thy going forth from "me, without pain, and by Thy birth; I adjure Thee by my breasts "which gave Thee suck, and by my lips which kissed Thee, and by my "arms which embraced Thee, and by my feet [A fol. 77 a. 1] which walk- "ed about with Thee; I adjure Thee by the cradle wherein Thou didst "lie, and by the swaddling bands wherein Thou wast swathed; O my "Son, my beloved one, I entreat and make supplication unto Thee that "Thou mayest hearken unto the voice of my petition, and mayest come "unto me, and mayest fulfil everything which is in my heart."

And it came to pass that when our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, the mother of the Light, had thus spoken, our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ came down, and with Him and round about Him were thousands of thousands and tens of thousands of thousands of angels. And He said [A fol. 77 a. 2] unto her, "What shall I do for thee, O Mary My mother? "And what wish is it that thou desirest that I shall fulfil for thee?" Then our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, made answer unto her beloved Son, and said unto Him, "O my Son, my beloved One, my Lord and my "Redeemer, my Hope and my Refuge, my trust is in Thee. In Thee

"have I my strength, and in Thy safe place do Thou protect me; Thou "art He Whom I remember always. And now, hearken Thou unto my "prayer and unto my entreaty, and incline Thine ear unto the words of "my mouth. I who speak unto Thee am Thy mother MARY, and I am "Thine handmaiden [A fol. 77*b*. 1]. Whosoever shall celebrate the festival "of my commemoration, or shall build a church in my name, or shall "clothe the naked, or shall visit the sick, or shall feed the hungry, or shall "give to drink him that is thirsty, or shall comfort him that is sorrowful, "or shall make to rejoice him that is sorrowful, or shall write a book of "my praises, or shall meditate upon the hymns to me on [the day of] my "festival, reward Thou him, O Lord, with a good reward from Thyself "the which eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard of, nor mind of man hath "conceived. I beseech Thee, and I make supplication unto Thee, O Lord, "on behalf of all those who shall believe on me, and do Thou make them "to be free from Sheol [A fol. 77*b*. 2]; and remember Thou him that is "an hungered, and him that is athirst, and all the trials which came upon "me with Thee". And our Lord Jesus Christ answered and said unto her, "It shall be even as thou sayest, and I will fulfil for thee all thy peti- "tion. Did I not become man through thee? I swear by Myself that I "will not break My covenant with thee". May her blessing be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Salutation unto thee, O Book of the Law and Covenant like unto the Table of stone

For each and every one who shall call upon thy name!

Let the hearts of sinners [A fol. 78*a*. 1] be softened, let the hearts of the violent be softened,

Let the hearts of those who are afflicted with sorrow be softened, O MARY! Amen.

THE COVENANT OF CHRIST WITH THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

One day our Lord Jesus Christ said unto MARY, "What sorrow "can be greater than that which came upon thee for My sake?" And our Lady MARY said unto Him, "O my Lord and God, there were the "five sorrows which came upon me for Thy sake, and they had exceed-"ingly great power over me. The first of them was the sorrow which I "endured[1] when Simeon prophesied concerning Thee in the Sanctuary, "how that the Jews would slay Thee. [A fol. 1*b*. 2] The second sorrow "which I endured was when I missed Thee in the Sanctuary and I was "seeking for Thee three days. The third sorrow which I endured was "when I remembered how they bound Thee hand and foot, and how the "men of Pilate scurged Thy back. The fourth sorrow which I endured was "when they crucified Thee between two thieves on the day of the Eve "of the Sabbath, and Thou wert naked, and they drove five nails through "Thy body. And the fifth sorrow which I endured was when I remember-"ed how Joseph and Nicodemus[2] took Thee down from the Cross and "swathed Thee in fine linen, and laid Thee in the tomb." And our Lord said unto her who had given Him birth, "Thus saith our Father Who "is in heaven, 'Whosoever shall keep in remembrance the sorrows and

"'[A fol. 2*a*. 1] sufferings which have come upon thee for My sake, and "'the salutation of Gabriel, I will remit to him his sins. And whosoever "'shall give an offering for thy name's sake I will remit to him his sins, "'and I will make him to inherit the kingdom of heaven. And I will "'come to him with thee, O thou Who didst give Me birth, and I will "'appear to him three days before his death'". This was the covenant which He made with His Mother, and she told it unto Dexius, who wrote it down together with [the account of] her Miracles, so that [all] believers might read it. May her prayer and blessing be with us for ever and ever! Amen.

What sorrow can be greater than the sorrows which came upon thee, O Virgin?
For thou didst give a cry when He cried unto thee a cry
On the day of the Eve of the Sabbath [A fol. 2*a*. 2] in which He was upon the holy wood, the Cross.
By thy five sorrows, O deliver me from perdition,
And from mighty terror of the awful Sheol (i. e., Hell).

BISHOP DEXIUS AND THE VIRGIN MARY.

[A fol. 3*a*. 1, B fol. 9*a*. 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD, WE WILL WRITE THE BOOK OF THE MIRACLES OF OUR LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH UNTO GOD. MAY HER PRAYER AND BLESSING BE WITH OUR KING DAVID! [AMEN].

Now there was a certain bishop in the church of Ṭelṭelyâ whose name was Dexius, and he was a righteous man, and a fearer of God, and he loved our Lady MARY exceedingly; his mouth declared her praise [B fol. 9*a*. 2], and his heart abounded [with thoughts of her], and he ministered unto her with exceedingly great diligence and care, and he wrote the Book of her Miracles and History, and he ceased [A fol. 3*a*. 2] not to meditate upon the same at eventide and at morn. And it came to pass that when he came nigh to finishing the writing of her praises, our Lady the Virgin MARY, the majesty of Christian people, brought unto him glad tidings openly, and she said unto him, "Give me the Book of "my History and Miracles, which my beloved son hath made, into my "hands"; and she took the Book of her Miracles, and she opened it and read therein, and she was exceedingly pleased therewith. And she said unto him, "Behold, O my beloved, thou hast toiled for me. Behold now, "I am well pleased with thee, and I give thanks unto thee. And the "blessing of [B fol. 9*b*. 1] my beloved Son shall be upon thee and shall "dwell in thy house, and He shall bless thy children and those that shall "be descended from thee with the blessing of heaven [A fol. 3*b*. 1] because "thou hast written this Book for me"; and having said these words she disappeared from him. And the bishop rejoiced with an exceeding great joy because MARY had brought him glad tidings, and had shown herself unto him openly, and had spoken unto him mouth to mouth; and he loved her the more, and his heart was smitten with deep love for her. Then he meditated in his heart and said, "Behold, I will exalt her honour and "majesty, and I will add thereunto very much more than I have been "wont to do aforetime". And he made a great festival, the like of which man had never made, in commemoration of [B fol. 9*b*. 2] MARY, not on the day of her glorious nativity, but before it, and he chose one day of all [A fol. 3*b*. 2] the days and established the celebration of the festival upon it, and he made regulations concerning it and confirmed it. And all the people of the city celebrate the festival unto this day according to the ordinance of the bishop, and they keep the feast of the commemoration of MARY with joy and gladness.

And our Lady MARY, the worker of good and the giver of [B fol. 10*a*. 1] grace, appeared a second time unto the bishop, and she had in her hand glorious, and beautiful, and splendid, and holy apparel. And Mâryâm (MARY), that is, Mârîhâm, answered and said unto him, "O "Dexius my beloved chosen one, my good and faithful servant, I praise "thee, and I extol thee, and I rejoice in thee, and [A fol. 4*a*. 1] I am well-"pleased with thy work. And inasmuch as thou hast rejoiced in me, and "hast ordained and established a festival in mine honour—now the Arch-"angel Gabriel, who brought unto me the glad tidings of the advent of "my beloved Son, hath related this unto me, and an angel hath told me "that thou hast published abroad the commemoration of my festival unto "all the people of the world each year, and hast made the poor, and the "[B fol. 10*a*. 2] needy, and all the people of the city to rejoice and be glad "for my name's sake—I will increase the reward of thine abundant toil in "this world, and I will exalt thine episcopal throne among [those of other "bishops] in proportion as thou hast shewn honour unto [A fol. 4*a*. 2] "me. And behold now, I have brought unto thee from heaven apparel "which hath been woven by the command of my beloved Son. [Take it,] "and put it on when thou art about to minister at the service or at the "consecration of the Eucharist, and no man shall have the power to array "himself therein except thyself, and none besides thee shall dare to sit "upon thy throne; and if there be any man who shall set himself in op-"position to the word of my commandment I will take vengeance upon "him with a mighty vengeance." And it came to pass that when the bishop had become old he brought his days to an end at a ripe old age, and he [B fol. 10*b*. 1] departed this world in peace and entered into life. And the apparel which MARY had given unto him remained among the treasures of the church [A fol. 4*b*. 1], and it was radiantly white and exceedingly splendid.

And after Dexius another bishop was appointed, and he yearned for that apparel and was exceedingly anxious to put it on; and he wished to sit upon [his] throne and to go up thereupon without the permission of

The angel Râguêl strips off the apparel which the Virgin Mary had given to Dexius from the presumptuous bishop who had dared to put it on, and by the command of the Virgin smites him in such wise that he dies.

MARY. And the priests of the church and the elders of the city said unto him, "Put not on this apparel before thou hast asked MARY [B fol. 10*b*. 2] "if she will be pleased to give it unto thee even as she gave it unto bishop "Dexius". And he said unto them, "I am the bishop even as he was, and "I have been appointed to [this] rank in the church; [A fol. 4*b*. 2] and "behold, I will put on this apparel, and I will take my seat upon his throne." So he did according to the desire of his heart, and they were not able to restrain him; and of his own will he put on the apparel and he was so bold as to go up upon the throne and to take his seat thereupon. And it came to pass at that time that he fell down from the throne and was dashed in pieces, and there was great dismay and quaking in the church; and Mâryâm (MARY), that is, Mârîhâm, [B fol. 11*a*. 1] smote him by the hand of the angel called Râguĕêl, and he perished and died. And violent grief, and fear, and dismay laid hold upon the people, and the priests, and deacons, who were gathered together in that place, and [A fol. 5*a*. 1] after they had come to themselves they marvelled and were silent by reason of the miracle which Mâryâm, that is, Mârîhâm, had wrought. And they ascribed glory unto God, and they exalted the greatness of the honour of Mâryâm, that is, Mârîhâm, and they worshipped with great humility kneeling upon their knees in the little chapel, and they offered up their praisings of MARY [B fol. 11*a*. 2] in fear and in trembling. And they brought forward as offerings for her service thousands [of pieces] of gold and silver, because they had seen the awful and terrifying wonder concerning the bishop [which had been wrought] in the church; and they exalted her and paid honour unto her. May her prayer and supplication redeem our king David from a cruel [A fol. 5*a*. 2] death and from the punishment of the judgment for ever.

[B fol. 11*a*. 2] O my Lady MARY, who without the seed of man didst give birth unto God, and who when Dexius had written the blessed Book of thy Miracles didst lay a ban upon another man that he should not put on his apparel nor seat himself upon his throne, and who, when a certain violent bishop opposed thy command and took his seat upon the throne of Dexius without being [B fol. 11*b*. 1] blessed by thee, didst smite him speedily by the hand of the angel Râguĕêl, so likewise do thou smite the enemies of the life of thy servant Khâyla Mâryâm at morn and at eve, so that he may proclaim the story of [thy greatness] for ever and ever. Amen. Dexius having gathered together and written down the Miracles of her who, being in a state of virginity, conceived and brought forth a child, the angel Gabriel having announced to her a message of glad tidings of great joy, and had published abroad the day of her commemoration, she gave him apparel and a throne.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE POOR MONK.

A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD.

May her prayer and blessing be with her servant Khâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain poor monk who possessed neither raiment nor food, but he believed on our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God, and he said unto her, "O give thou the command [B fol. 11*b*. 2] concerning "me that I may eat, and drink, and clothe myself withal"; and having said these words he fell asleep. And it came to pass that our Lady MARY, who gave birth to God, came at the time of midnight, and she appeared unto him in a vision, and said unto him, "What sayest thou, O monk? "Take this raiment and it shall be thine." And when he awoke from his sleep he found apparel [there], and he rejoiced with an exceedingly great joy, and all the people who saw this miracle which our Lady

The Virgin Mary appears to one of her servants from out of her image, and addresses him, and in answer to his words "Blessed art thou among women," says," And blessed art thou also among men."

MARY, who gave birth to God, had wrought marvelled. May her prayer and blessing be with her servant Khâyla Mâryâm for ever and ever! Amen.

PRAYER BY THE COMPILER OF THE MIRACLES OF THE VIRGIN.

[A fol. 6*b*. 1] When a man desireth to build a house doth he not first of all make ready everything which he will require therefor? O MARY, I beseech thee to give unto me the spirit of knowledge, and since I desire to relate thy wonderful deeds make me to understand them, and make me to follow in a straight path thy gracious acts.

CHAPTER I.

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE ARTIFICER.

[B fol. 12*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH UNTO GOD. May her prayer and the mercy of her beloved Son be with the soul of our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was a certain artificer who loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, with all his heart, and he was wont to read salutations unto her day by day [A fol. 6*b*. 2] continually, both evening and morning; and he continued to salute her for many days. And it came to pass one day that he said unto her, "O my "gracious Lady, I pay salutations unto thee continually, but thou dost "never return my salutation unto me"; and after he had said these words unto her he began to read the salutation of our Lady MARY, standing before her image. [B fol. 12*b*. 2] And when he came to the passage where he should say, "Blessed art thou among women", our Lady MARY, who gave birth unto God, answered him from out of the image, and said unto him, "And blessed art thou among men"; and thus she spake unto him thrice. Now when the artificer heard these words from the [A fol. 7*a*. 1] image of our Lady MARY, he bowed down before her and repented himself that he had dared to speak unto her; but he rejoiced because of the words which she had spoken unto him. And he loved her much more than formerly, and he devoted himself the more to her service until he passed away from this fleeting world. May the prayer and blessing of our Lady MARY [B fol. 13*a*. 1] be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Inasmuch as the angel who announced glad tidings [unto thee] gave thee an everlasting salutation,
The artificer was dear unto thee.
Since thou, O MARY, wert blessed by the Book of Ḥâwî[1],
Bless me, O my Lady, and [may] thy Son [A fol. 7*a*. 2] the Nazarene [bless me]
With the blessings of Judah and Levi!

THE JEW OF THE CITY OF AKHMÎM.

[A fol. 8*a*. 1; B fol. 13*b*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH UNTO GOD; may her prayer and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

[1] The Book of Ḥâwî is a large theological work which was written in Greek by one Antiochus of the Monastery of Siḳ, which lay on the east of Jerusalem. It was translated into Arabic by Gabriel ibn Batrak A. H. 665 = A. D. 1266—67, and into Ethiopic by Salîk A. M. 7074 = A. D. 1582. See WRIGHT, Catalogue of Ethiopic MSS. p. 235.

Now there was a certain Hebrew in the city of Akhmîm[1] who loved our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, from the depth (literally root) of his heart, and the mention of her name with fear and trembling was never absent from his tongue; and when he bowed down before her he was wont to embrace the ground in honour of her name. And the man was a priest, and he ministered holily [A fol. 8*a*. 2] in the church at the time of [burning] incense and [of offering up] the Offering. And it came to pass that when the days of his youth had passed he lacked strength and he was [B fol. 13*b*. 1] unable to stand up. And when the archbishop knew that he had become feeble and was not able to stand up, he associated two deacons with him that they might give him assistance. Now one day as he was praising the name of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and was bowing down [to her] to the ground, he fell forwards upon his breast and his backbone was broken. And he cried out with a loud voice, and said, "O my Lady MARY, come thou and help me in my [A fol. 8*b*. 1] "fall". Then straightway our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared unto him standing on the right of the altar; and she stretched out her hand to him and touched his backbone which was broken, and made it whole, and she gave him a sign to come and stand on the [B fol. 14*a*. 1] right of the altar by her side. And immediately he saw this he rejoiced greatly, and he marvelled and was astonished at the beauty of her form and at the splendour (or light) which was upon her; and his old age was renewed, and he became a vigorous young man [again]. And he continued to minister in the church unto our holy Lady the Virgin MARY all his days, and she added unto the years of his life one hundred and thirty [A fol. 8*b*. 2] years; and all his days were two hundred and thirty

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE SCRIBE DAMIANUS.

Now there was a certain monk called Damianus who dwelt in the city of Philippi,[1] and he loved our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, from the depth (literally root) of his heart, and he served her with all his power and strength, and he kept vigil by day and by night in her church. And that monk was a scribe, and it came to pass as he was copying the books that every time he had to make mention of our holy [A fol. 9*b*. 2] Lady MARY [B fol. 15*a*. 2] he magnified her and paid honour unto her. Now, he did not write her name with common black ink,[2] but he wrote it with ink of gold and silver, and with rose-coloured paint, and with divers splendid colours which were like unto them in beauty and value. And when that scribe fell ill, and was nigh unto death, before his soul went forth [from his body] our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, appeared unto him, and said unto him, "O my faithful servant, art not thou he who "instead of writing my name in common black ink has done so with ink "of gold and silver, and with divers splendid colours which are like unto "them in beauty and value, and has decorated it and made it glorious "with all thy might? Abbâs, Bishop of Rome, in administering the Holy Mysteries to a woman, touches her face.

Now there was a certain bishop of Rome who was called Abbâs; and he was a good and holy man, and he feared God Almighty and kept himself from unchastity and from meditation upon evil. And it came to pass that one day during the festival when he was saying the prayer of consecration so that he might administer the Holy Mysteries to the people—now the people, both men and women, were in the habit at the time when they were about to receive the Holy [A fol. 11*a*. 2] Mysteries, before they prostrated themselves, of embracing the hands and the feet of the priest who was going to minister unto them—he smelt [B fol. 16*b*. 2] the smell of a certain woman as she was embracing his hands, and the unclean desire of the flesh entered into his heart, and he burned with the flame of lust. And after he had ended the Offering, he departed and went quickly into the house of the treasures belonging to the church, and he took a knife and cut off his hand, and he began to weep. And it came to pass that when he tarried the people in the sanctuary were very sad, and the priests and deacons went to him, and said unto him, "O master "and governor of the people, we have [A fol. 11*b*. 1] waited long [for thee], "and we are greatly grieved at thy tarrying"; and when they spake these words to him he wept the more, and then he rose up and went with them. And he came before the picture of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, [B fol. 17*a*. 1] and fell down on his face before it, and he worshipped her and made supplication unto her and entreated her to have mercy upon him, and to help him, and to pardon him his sin. Then straightway our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared unto him, and she took his hand in her holy hands, and re-joined [it] to the place from which it had been cut off, and it became whole even as it was aforetime, and no mark [A fol. 11*b*. 2] whatever of the cut could be found; then she disappeared from him. And when the priests and deacons saw this they marvelled and were silent, and they related this miracle to the people; and they ascribed praise unto the glorious and Most High God, and gave

Now Abbâs, a priest of Rome,
As thou, O MARY, the [A fol. 12*a*. 1] sister of Salome, didst heal him aforetime,
Even so heal thou the wound of my soul, and grant me rest
Whensoever I invoke thy name which giveth protection.

CHAPTER VI.

[A fol. 13*a*. 1; B fol. 18*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY THE TWO-FOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and blessing be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there was in this holy monastery, which was famous in the days of the Abbûna Abbâ Gabriel, Archbishop of Alexandria, a certain holy monk who had lived here from his youth, and his name was Isaac; and he loved our Lady with all his might. And he prepared for himself certain work to do without any man knowing thereof, and he was the guardian of the church, and the key [thereof] was in his hand. And after the prayer which was said before [A fol. 13*a*. 2] sleep was ended, Isaac, a monk, having prayed to Christ that he might see His mother, the Virgin Mary appears to him from her shrine. At the sight of her Isaac falls prostrate as one dead, but the Virgin raises him up, and speaks words of comfort to him.

and when the monks had gone into their cells to sleep, Isaac used to go to the church, and having opened the door [B fol. 18*a*. 2] he would go inside it, and stand up before the image of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, which was in the western wall, the whole night long. And he would begin to say the prayer of the Gospel, and he would prostrate himself before her three hundred times[1], and say at each prostration, "O "my Lord Jesus Christ, make me to see Thy Mother"; and he continued to do this for seven years and no man whatever knew thereof. And it came to pass, at the end of the seven years, on a certain night of the festival of our Lady the Virgin which falleth on the twenty-first day of the month Tâkhshâsh[2], when Isaac [A fol. 13*b*. 1] was bowing down before the image of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, that she came forth from her image and she shone with an exceedingly great splendour which was seven times brighter than lightning. [B fol. 18*b*. 1] And she said unto him, "Why hast thou wearied thyself [in entreating] my beloved Son to "shew thee her who gave Him birth? Behold, I am the Mother of Life, "and the woman who gave birth to Jesus Christ; command me and I "will come to thee, and whatsoever thou desirest that will I do for thee". And he said unto her, "O my Lady, I beseech thee to make supplication "on my behalf to thy beloved Son". And she said unto him, "Behold, "God Almighty hath received thy petition, and He hath commanded me "to come to thee and to fulfil thy desire; and three days [A fol. 13*b*. 2] "hence thou shalt be with me where I am". And it came to pass that when he heard her words and saw her beauty and that she was crowned with light, he fell down upon the ground and became like a dead man. Then did she take hold of him with her hand and lift him [B fol. 18*b*. 2] up, and she disappeared from him into the image which was before him.

[2] December 17.

Then straightway Isaac went into [his] cell, and the sickness of fever fell upon him, and in the morning he called for the bishop of the city, whose name was Abraham, and who chanced to be dwelling in the monastery that day, and when he came to him he made known to him all that he had seen. And Isaac said unto him, "O my father, "release me from all the bonds of [my] sin, for I dared to beseech "God to shew me her who [A fol. 14*a*. 1] gave Him birth, a thing for "which I was unfit"; and he released him, and said unto him, "O my son, "if thou goest to God make thou mention of me, so that I may find mercy "[with Him] on the day of the great judgment". And at the end of the third day Isaac died, and he inherited life everlasting, even as our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, had promised him. May her blessing and prayer be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Isaac the monk, having wished and desired greatly,
Saw thy beautiful face [O MARY] on a certain day.
As thou didst speak unto him until he rejoiced exceedingly,
So, O my Lady, say thou unto me, "Rejoice, O my servant,

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE CHILD MARY.

to a woman by whom he had had three children, two boys and one girl. Now the girl was young, and she was called Mary. And the mother of the children died, and they mourned for her. And it came to pass on a day, which was the festival of the glorious [A fol. 15*a*. 2] Nativity[1], that they wished to go to the church, and they left the little girl [in the house] and fastened the door upon her [B fol. 19*b*. 2], so that she might not go out, for it was night. But she wept and cried out, saying, "Take me with "you, and let me participate in the offering up of the Offering"; but they refused [to take] her, and they went on their way. Then she went to the image of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, and she cried out with tears, saying, "O my Lady, have compassion upon me, and "give me consolation". And straightway our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, who maketh to rejoice and giveth consolation to those who make supplication unto her, appeared unto the girl, and said unto her, "What aileth "thee, O my daughter?" And our holy [A fol. 15*b*. 1] Lady MARY [B fol. 20*a*. 1] embraced the child, who said unto her, "They would not let me "go to church to partake of the Offering on the holy festival [of the day] "on which our Redeemer was born". And our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, said unto her, "Be not grieved, and come [with me]"; and she carried the child to the church, and she partook of the Offering with the folk who were enlightened. Then our Lady MARY said unto her, "Three days hence I will take thee, and thou shalt be with me"; and three days later the child departed this life, and the Virgin MARY made her like unto herself. And a certain good, and righteous, and [A fol. 15*b*. 2] God-fearing man saw the child arrayed in purple and following our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, the Mother of life, who redeemeth us, and he marvelled greatly, and he told the people [concerning her]. And those who heard this praised the glorious and Most High

THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE PAINTER.

Now there was in days of old a certain man who was a painter, and there was no one who could be compared with him in the work of painting; and he loved our holy Lady the Virgin MARY with his whole heart. And whensoever he painted a portrait of her he did so with the most extreme care, and he employed his greatest skill in the performance of the work. And it came to pass that he painted a likeness of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, in a certain church in the country of France on [A fol. 17*a*. 2] a stone wall; and the picture was a most wonderful and marvellous piece of work, and every one who saw it was [B fol. 21*a*. 2] astonished at the beauty of her form, and was led to believe that she was speaking unto him. And he painted another picture of Paradise [shewing] how [the blessed] dwelt therein; and this picture was [painted] by the side of the likeness of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY. And he painted yet another picture of hell and of the Devil who had been cast therein, and of his wicked fiends. And Satan saw him and was filled with rage against him, and he threw down the scaffolding on which he was painting, and both the painter and his scaffolding were falling [B fol. 21*b*. 1] to the ground—now the French church was a very lofty one. And the painter cried out, "O my Lady "MARY, [A fol. 17*b*. 1] help me and deliver me from destruction". And straightway a hand of light came forth from the likeness of the Virgin, and she stretched forth her arm and laid hold of the man who was suspended in mid-air with her hand from out of the picture, and he remained suspended at a height of ten cubits from the ground; and the painter remained suspended from the hand out of the picture and uttering cries for the space of one hour. And when the people heard his outcry they came to him and saw what a wonderful thing had been wrought by our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY; then, little by little, she let the painter come down, and she handed him over to the men that they might [A fol. 17*b*. 2] deliver him one to the other. And the people who saw this wonderful thing gave glory unto God Almighty [B fol. 21*b*. 2], and praised our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God, and they said, "Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy "womb"; and they celebrated a great festival for seven days. And they called that picture, "The picture which delivered him and raised him up "out of the dust"; and the hand hath remained stretched out from the picture, just as it was when it laid hold on the painter, even unto this day, so that it may be a memorial of the event unto him that shall come after. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with [A fol. 18*a*. 1] our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

and knelt down upon his knees on the ground [A fol. 21*a*. 2]. Now when he knelt down, the captain of the thieves saw a lady come down from heaven with great glory, and there were beautiful virgins with her; and they set a seat for her, and she sat [B fol. 24*b*. 2] down in front of Zacharias, from whose mouth, every time he spake, there came forth a rose. And our holy Lady the Virgin MARY rose up and took him to her bosom until she had received fifty roses from him; now the captain of the thieves counted them and he saw them with his own eyes. And it came to pass that when Zacharias had finished his prayer, our holy Lady, the [A fol. 21*b*. 1] two-fold Virgin MARY, laid her hand upon his head, and having blessed him she went up into heaven with the virgins; and the captain of the thieves marvelled at what he had seen, and he turned away into the wilderness. Then Zacharias returned to set out again on his [B fol. 49*a*. 1] journey, and immediately the thieves rose up against him and seized him. And the captain of the thieves said unto him, "Tell me how thou couldst send away [those] beautiful women and "what thou hast done with them." And Zacharias said unto him, "I am "a sinful man, and I know nothing whatever of beautiful women. But I "used to offer as a gift each day to our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, "who gave birth to God, [A fol. 21*b*. 2] fifty salutations, saying, Rejoice, "O thou who art full of grace, [for] God is with thee." And they sent Zacharias away on his journey and he departed in peace; and afterwards the thieves repented and became monks, and they served our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin MARY, all the days of their life. THE VIRGIN MARY AND THE WOMEN JULIANA AND BARBARA.

[A fol. 23*a*. 1; B fol. 50*a*. 1] A MIRACLE OF OUR HOLY LADY, THE TWOFOLD VIRGIN MARY, WHO GAVE BIRTH TO GOD. May her prayer and blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.

Now there were two handmaidens of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, who gave birth to God in Bethlehem of the children of Judah; the name of one was Juliana, and the name of the other was Barbara. And one day, as they were going to Jerusalem to worship at the Feast of the Departure of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY in the city of Rôsmâdûk, they were surrounded by thieves who took away their food from them. And it came to pass that when the thieves had divided [A fol. 23*a*. 2] the bread which they had taken from them, they began to eat it among themselves. And as each one of them put a [B fol. 50*a*. 2] morsel of it into his mouth and began to eat, straightway their front teeth and their grinders became broken, and their mouths were filled with pieces of broken teeth, and the insides of their mouths and throats were deeply cut by them; and they could not speak and were nigh unto death. And those who saw and heard this miracle marvelled greatly and were astonished, and by reason of their terror and awe of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, fear and trembling entered into their hearts. Then the thieves went and repented, and they forsook their evil deeds, and they entreated forgiveness of their sins from our holy Lady the [A fol. 23*b*. 1] Virgin MARY, and they gave unto Juliana and [B fol. 50*b*. 1] Barbara each a double portion of goods in return for their food which they had carried off. And our Lady, the storehouse of mercy, spared them, and restored their teeth to the condition in which they were aforetime; for she is able to do all things, and there is nothing which she cannot do, and she is a worker of miracles and wonders. May her prayer and her blessing, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our king David for ever and ever! Amen.
